Shortage of space issue in Shawano County

Housing, business space at a premium as more workers, entrepreneurs want to come here

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

Work is taking place on additional housing in Shawano County to bring more people here as home prices continue to rise in the region.

That's the message that Peter Thillman, chief economic development officer for Shawano County Economic Progress Inc. (SCEPI), relayed in his annual report to the Shawano County Board of Supervisors on July 26. Thillman reported that the median sale price in May 2022 was $217,500, the first time since 2017 where the median price was over $200,000.

That is a huge jump compared to the previous year, when the median price was $160,000. However, housing sales have slowed way down, but that has more to do with the short supply of housing, according to Thillman.

"We just don't have enough houses," he said. "We need to get some more built and increase the tax base in that regard."

Net new construction was $40.65 million in 2020 but jumped to $52.52 million in 2021. Figures from 2022 are expected out in August from the Wisconsin Department of Workforce Development, but Thillman is expecting another increase in net construction.

Although the shortage of housing is not resolved, progress is being made, according to Thillman.

"The housing study you paid for two years ago is starting to pay dividends," he said. "We're seeing housing developments now from Bonduel to Wittenberg, and Caroline even has interest. I expect to see more housing developments coming forward this year."

The price tag for those new homes could be higher than some aspiring homeowners want, however. Thillman said the average price of a starter home being built is around $340,000.

For those who do make the decision to move to Shawano County, finding employment is not difficult.

"Everyone who wants a job can have a job," Thillman said. "We need to get some more workers because of the expansions we have."

Entrepreneurship is also booming throughout the county, according to Thillman, with 59 businesses participating in SCEPI's Main Street Bounce Back program and receiving almost $600,000 in grants. The problem businesses are having, he said, is that there aren't enough workers to go around.

"You're still exporting a tremendous amount of labor outside of the county," Thillman said, meaning that many Shawano County residents are commuting or working remotely for businesses in Green Bay, Appleton and Wausau. "We're seeing expansions in the county, because it allows people who are driving to the Valley or Wausau to work remotely for the same wages."

Thillman also announced the sale of the old Reinhart Foodservice building on East Richmond Street in Shawano, which has sat empty since the company, now called Performance Food Service, built its new facility on County Road B in 2020.

However, there is more interest in bringing business to the county than there is space to make it happen. Thillman said a number of businesses are looking for warehouse space ranging from 5,000 to 20,000 square feet.

Also, existing businesses are taking advantage of the county's micro-loan program, which provides up to $10,000 for signs, fixtures, equipment, facade improvements, interior improvements and working capital.

"Our micro-loan program is almost fully depleted," Thillman said.

We all know change is a constant in life. As your trusted and valued local media provider, you expect NEW Media Inc. and its publications in Shawano, Wittenberg and Oconto County to evolve with the times.

I've been in the newspaper business across Wisconsin since the late 1980s (just a few years after graduating from Shawano High School), and I've witnessed many transitions in news coverage — from the black and white photos to color, from film cameras to digital ones, from manual page design to a variety of computer software programs, the use of the internet to mine for information for articles and now the continued transition from paper to digital format.

Those experiences will help me guide this latest transition of my hometown newspaper.

Readers are turning more and more to online sites for types and quantities of information that quite frankly won't fit in the pages of a newspaper. That information includes longer and more in-depth news articles, photo packages, court documents, maps, school district and municipal reports, budgets and more.

In the days and weeks ahead, readers will begin to notice more examples of these pieces of information on our website, www.newmedia-wi.com.

We are moving our TV listings and comics online, and they will be featured as supplemental pages to our e-edition. For those times when the paper product may not have sufficient space for some columnists, they will be published exclusively online.

We continue to be the leading community resource for comprehensive news and sports coverage, and our combination of the print paper and website is the best way to present that information in these changing times.

Fellow staff members Warren Bluhm and Lee Pulaski have a combined more than 60 years of experience in the news business. My 35-plus years puts our team close to 100 years of experience. That's a lot of city council meetings, high school basketball games, lemonade stands and other great community activities.

Much of the content that will be found solely on our website will be highlighted in print, so readers will know each week some of the items they can find there. Social media posts will also point the way to on-line resources.

Our evolving content packages will provide you the information you want while also keeping NEW Media as a complete local news source.

We welcome your feedback and are always eager to hear from the communities we serve.

Shawano gets $1M grant for infrastructure

Three street sections slated for 2024 reconstruction

By KEVIN PASSON
Editor-in-chief

The city of Shawano is among 21 Wisconsin communities sharing more than $20 million to fund public improvement projects.

The Community Development Block Grant Public Facilities (CDBG-PF) grants are administered by the Wisconsin Department of Administration (DOA) for public infrastructure projects in low- to moderate-income communities with populations of 50,000 or fewer. Projects include improvements, repairs, or expansions of streets, drainage systems, water and sewer systems, sidewalks and community facilities.

Scott Kroening, director of Shawano's Department of Public Works, said the money will be used for three road projects in 2024, sooner than originally expected.

These projects are the reconstruction of South Franklin Street from West Stevens Avenue to West Lieg Avenue, South Lutz Street from East Zingler Avenue to East Lieg

South Andrews Street from East Zingler Avenue to East Lieg Avenue will be among the roadways to be reconstructed in 2024 thanks to a $1 million grant from the state of Wisconsin. City officials said select blocks on South Andrews Street, South Lutz Street and South Franklin Street will be rebuilt with the help of the state funds.

KEVIN PASSON | NEW MEDIA

Avenue, and South Andrews Street from East Zingler Avenue to East Lieg Avenue.

"This will be a full reconstruction," Kroening said. "That includes sanitary sewer, water mains, storm sewer, curb and gutter, sidewalks and pavement replacement."

Matt Pleshek, city engineer, said estimates are that the projects will cost $1.65 million, with the city paying everything above the $1 million grant. Pleshek said the city generally spends $1 million a year on road reconstruction projects, so there won't be any need to add to the 2024 budget to accommodate these projects.

Pleshek said bids will be sought in December with work expected to begin around May 1 and take several months.

Wisconsin receives CDBG funds from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and distributes those funds toward public facility, housing, and economic development projects.

"From Antigo to Wheeler, these pivotal projects will help our communities build for the future, improve public services and provide family-sustaining jobs," Gov. Tony Evers said. "We're continuing our work to build the infrastructure we need to support a 21st-century workforce and 21st-century economy in communities across our state."

Pleshek said the streets to be reconstructed represent some of the oldest parts of the city, and the South Lutz Street blocks are the most densely populated of all blocks in the city.

"Lutz Street has 40 residences," he said. "There are another 33 on Andrews and 19 on Franklin."

Pleshek said the application for the grant was extensive, and the city enlisted the help of MSA Professional Services, an engineering consultant.

"The grant targeted these streets," Pleshek said. "Many of the residents who live on these streets are in the low- to moderate-income levels, which is what the grant is for."

"The CDBG-PF grant program is critical for our smaller communities and will help us build for the future," added DOA Secretary Kathy Blumenfeld.

County Board OKs plan to update facilities

Courthouse, library have both aged beyond usefulness and need replacing in next few years

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

The Shawano County Board of Supervisors gave its unanimous approval July 26 to begin a process that could eventually yield two new buildings adjacent to the existing courthouse and jail in Shawano, but there's still the question of whether that support will evaporate once the total cost is determined.

Administrative Coordinator James Davel is leading the charge to look at building a new government facility west of the courthouse and a new justice center adjacent to the west side of the jail. He estimates that, even if the county tries to fast-track the effort, it will take at least three to five years to come to fruition. The county would be seeing at least two, possibly three, election cycles take place where some supervisors step down and others are elected, but Davel feels it's necessary to be proactive and not reactive.

"It's imperative that the board has commitment here," he said.

The county courthouse was built in 1956, a $1 million project that was a big commitment for the time period, but little has been done outside of necessities to improve the building. Having two separate buildings, according to Davel, will clear up safety issues, reduce costly maintenance ventures and also integrate the main branch of the Shawano County Library, whose own building is also aging rapidly with maintenance needs that are unaffordable.

County Board Chairman Thomas Kautza sees the existing courthouse as a money pit, one that will suck up more money as the facility approaches the 70-year mark.

"Sooner or later, we have to make a commitment," Kautza said. "We're in an old building. Yes, it's still functional, but if you look through the (building) assessment, we've got to start pouring money into it."

Earlier this year, a torrential rain caused a large amount of water to fill up the elevator shaft at the courthouse and flood parts of the courthouse's basement level, including the county coroner's office. The elevator alone cost the county $7,000 to repair, but there's much more that needs to be done to keep the existing building viable, but like the library, those maintenance needs are becoming too expensive.

"It's very hard to decide when you stop putting money into a money pit compared to something that's going to be much more energy efficient and it's going to last a great time," Kautza said.

Even though the enthusiasm to grow and change is there, Davel said the county has difficulty with follow-through. He noted multiple space studies have been done, but no further action materialized because supervisors revulsed when they saw the price tag.

"You add it all up, there was $1 million, but no action was taken," Davel said.

He added that the current courthouse is one of the few in the state that is wide open without security measures like metal detectors. Deputies from the sheriff's department have to regularly go to the courthouse to watch over defendants from the jail or preserve the peace when problems arise.

"Court is not a 1956 court anymore," Davel said. "There are a lot of issues in court. We're walking our prisoners across (the street) right now."

Davel acknowledged there's a long road ahead, but it's a necessary quest to avoid paying through the nose in the long run.

"I think it's imperative that the supervisors set the conditions for success for the future of Shawano County," Davel said.

Supervisor Jerry Erdmann strongly agreed with Davel's assessment. A previous board chairman himself, he has seen a number of instances when the county preached change and then backpedaled, which he feels puts Shawano County back in the dark ages.

"We've always had plans to do certain things, but we've failed at the plan," Erdmann said. "Plans don't get us nowhere. We have to take action. Do we want to continue to throw taxpayer money away, or do we want to invest in something that will last us another half century?"

The courthouse has not only outlived its shelf life, in Davel's view, but also its usefulness. That's why a multi-use facility is essential, he said.

"It was built as a bomb shelter when this whole thing was done," Davel said. "When you look at these things and you combine them, you have a heck of a problem set."

Man gets 20-plus years for child sex assault

Pamaska found guilty of having sex with 9-year-old girl at Menominee Casino Resort

By KEVIN MURPHY
Correspondent

A former Keshena man was sentenced July 24 in federal court to 21½ years in prison for performing a sex act on a 9-year-old girl in 2019.

Gerald L. Pamaska Jr., 55, also known as Doon, had sexual contact with a girl he was babysitting on July 15, 2019, at the Menominee Casino Resort.

According to court documents, the incident was reported in April 2022 during the investigation of two other unrelated sexual assaults of the same girl by two different men.

At that time, Pamaska was serving a sentence in a Kansas county jail for fondling a woman in a liquor store. He confessed to committing the crime that occurred at the casino hotel to an FBI agent.

GERALD PAMASKA

Pamaska said that he had been invited to the casino hotel by friends of the victim's mother. Although neither the child nor her mother knew Pamaska, the mother left her daughter in a hotel room in Pamaska's care to drink in the casino with her friends.

Pamaska drank, too, before and during the time that he was with the girl, according to court documents. He told the agent that he had sexual contact twice with the child.

Pamaska was indicted last December for aggravated sexual abuse, which has a 30-year mandatory minimum sentence.

He was transported back to Wisconsin and pled guilty in April to a sexual abuse charge punishable by a sentence of zero to life in prison. Assistant U.S. Attorney Andrew Maier agreed to recommend an 18-to-25-year sentence for Pamaska.

On July 24, Pamaska's attorney, Thomas Phillip, asked for an 18-year sentence for his client contending that it was unlikely that the government would have been able to prosecute Pamaska without his confession.

His confession corroborated enough details of the girl's report to support an indictment and his guilty plea, Phillip wrote.

Pamaska did not want to go to trial and face the 30-year mandatory minimum sentence, Phillip wrote.

Pamaska has high blood pressure, obesity, joint problems, and symptoms from a broken foot in 2021. He also is losing vision in his right eye, caused by an accident that occurred while working in the woods on the Menominee Reservation.

"But his primary problem is alcohol abuse, as shown in this case and in the majority of his criminal record entries," Phillip wrote the court.

Pamaska told a court pre-sentence investigator of his periods of daily drinking and periods and "acknowledged the role alcohol has played in his criminal record ... and further admitted he was under the influence of alcohol when he engaged in the (casino hotel) offense," Phillip wrote.

Pamaska understands the seriousness of his crime and that District Judge William Griesbach could impose a sentence longer than 18 years in prison, Phillip wrote.

Murals multiplying around Shawano

Businesses, city parks enlisting artists to turn ordinary walls into works of art

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

Shawano County already has a reputation for being an area for artists, but more evidence is popping up around the city of Shawano these days.

GenEx held a dedication of its mural July 25 at its main headquarters on Green Bay Street in Shawano. The genetics cooperative's mural highlighted family values and the circle of life with a father and daughter, as well as a cow and calf, but it also paid tribute to Shawano County's status as the barn quilt capital with segments of barn quilt patterns.

On North Main Street facing the Shawano County Courthouse, Lucas Hartwig with Tatted Dad Company and Twig's Beverage just recently completed a mural with the words "Main Street" highlighted in neon green. The words are sandwiched between images of Wisconsin's distinct seasons.

At Stubborn Brothers Brewery on South Main Street, a pair of dogs on leashes are painted near the entrance of the brewery itself. This mural has gained some popularity on social media as people have taken photos of themselves with their hands out-reached to the leashes to generate the appearance that they're walking the dogs by the establishment.

Even restroom doors are being turned into works of art as Tara Kelliher with the city's parks and recreation department painted images of musical instruments and city views on a facility facing Franklin Park on South Washington Street. The images connect how Shawano is getting a reputation for providing entertainment during the week and on the weekends at Franklin and at the Naberhood Plaza.

Spencer Young, of Shiocton, painted the GenEx mural, along with the murals at Twig's Beverage and the Shawano Barbershop. He took the design provided by a team from GenEx and brought it to life facing the company's parking lot.

"I just basically brought the vision to life," Young said, noting he spent about 100 hours over two weeks turning the wall into art. "It's kind of challenging when you have to figure out what days to come out, because some are too hot."

Young likes the idea of his work being on display on walls for people to enjoy.

"At the end of the day, I feel like I'm leaving my mark on not only the community but my art as my legacy," he said.

Besides beautifying the sides of buildings in Shawano, the murals are also helping to showcase the city as a great place to work and live, according to Maddie Stuewer, the city's recreation coordinator.

"I think the growth has helped people who have these artistic abilities to be able to express themselves and for their skills to be utilized, and the community's been supporting that, which is awesome to see," Stuewer said.

Stuewer said Kelliher is planning to do murals on the electrical boxes at the Naberhood in the future.

"She's just got so much stuff planned," Stuewer said. "I don't know how many murals we've got now."

The idea of murals in a Shawano County community is not a new one. Wittenberg has more than 25 murals on businesses, the post office, Homme Home and more since starting the program in 2005. However, that program is facilitated through a community program through the Walls of Wittenberg, while Shawano's efforts appear to be a little more spontaneous.

"Several of them aren't through us," Stuewer said, referring to the city. "Lucas Hartwig's one on Main Street, GenEx's — those are their own thing. I think that's inspired other people to do the same thing because they've seen what a positive impact it can play on our downtown and city as a whole."

'Recessive' brings Menominee artists together

Schwitzer, Gauthier release part 1 of comic book that uses CMN sustainability model as plot point

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

Comic books have always featured heroes who try to save the world, but there's a new one coming out that has a world-in-peril solution that's a little closer to home.

Nicholas Schwitzer with the College of Menominee Nation's Sustainable Development Institute (SDI) teamed up with Justin Gauthier, a Menominee actor and writer, to produce the comic book "Recessive," a tale about how an invasive plant appears on the reservation and is a danger to humans, animals and plant life.

"We thought, 'Hey, wouldn't it be cool if we had a comic book that talked about our sustainability model,'" Schwitzer said.

The comic book was made possible through a grant with the American Indian College Fund's Sharing Arts and Learning program. Schwitzer said it was an opportunity for using a modern art like comics books to share knowledge about Indigenous ways.

"For that, you need a great storyteller, and that's why we got Justin," Schwitzer said. "SDI has worked with him previously multiple times, just because he is so cool, and we like having him here."

Gauthier, who also admitted to being a director and "sandwich eater," noted that he and Schwitzer collaborated quite a bit on the comic while in separate places — Gauthier was in Seattle performing on the stage there while Schwitzer was in Keshena working on the art for the comic book at the same time he was doing his work with the SDI. Gauthier said he and Schwitzer were quite good at working together on character development and other ideas, even from a distance.

"I could always call him and ask him his opinion on things," Gauthier said. "I put a lot of stock in the artist, especially in the comic book world, because you can always come up with all the flavor and base in the script, your soup, but the tender loving care that goes into the cooking process is all the artist. Nicholas had a great mind's eye for basically what I was writing down. He did some character sketches, and I was like, 'This was actually what I was thinking.' It was weird."

LEE PULASKI | NEW MEDIA

The process began in 2021, and Gauthier said he used a process similar to developing stories for Marvel Comics, where he'd plot out the entire script. As the character traits were developing, the dialogue started to fall in place, he said, along with how the characters related to each other and how they spoke.

"We wanted it to be ground in a reality without being completely real," Gauthier said. "We wanted it to be a recognizable reality, but we wanted it to be a bit heightened and a bit stylized in a way that would fascinate readers."

Gauthier, who just recently finished filming the third and final season of "Reservation Dogs" for FX Productions, said he never imagined that he would be a comic book writer, with acting and theater being more of his forte, but when Schwitzer and the SDI approached him about the sustainability project, he knew he had to be a part of it.

"I was totally on board with it," Gauthier said. "As an artist, it's a huge honor when someone reaches out to you for anything. Being an artist can be a totally soul-crushing career to be in, so anything where there's some sort of validation and people want to work with you, that's an awesome thing, and you've got to try your best."

Gauthier noted that the world of sustainability has a lot of facets, and not all of them are covered in "Recessive," but the theoretical model that the Menominee use made sense for the story while looking at the story through that lens.

Schwitzer, who pursued a degree through the University of Wisconsin-Stout in entertainment design, started working on the artwork late in 2021, using Adobe Photoshop to develop the blocks and the characters within those blocks. While he learned a little bit about comic book theory during college, he felt like he still had some things to learn about the world of comic book publishing when he started on "Recessive," he said.

Originally, the thought was to develop a 10-page comic book, according to Schwitzer, but then Gauthier came up with a script that was 44 pages, which prompted the pair to split the comic book into two parts. Part one was released in July, and the second part is expected to be published in 2024.

"We've even split some pages into separate pages, so a lot of the drawings I have for the comic are (labeled) 17A and 17B, so there was a lot more than we expected," Schwitzer said. "The story was still worthwhile, and we knew we had to do it."

Even though Schwitzer decided he wanted to be a comic book artist at age 10 and has been scribbling since he could remember, he felt going digital was the route necessary to make "Recessive" a reality. He penciled out a lot of the visual part of the story and then rebuilt it through Photoshop.

"There's only a couple of difference between them (the drawn and digital versions), but there's also some things that are very unique about them," Schwitzer said. "When I did it in Photoshop, I utilized a design called action figures, which was inspired by 3D animation, and it made it a lot easier and sustainable for myself not having to redraw the characters every time."

The redemptive entrepreneurship movement from Indiana spent a recent weekend at the Novitiate in Gresham enjoying God's creation and each other. A couple of busloads of people attended the weekend events, which included a hot air balloon ride over the property. Formerly the site of the Alexian Brothers Novitiate, the 180 acres sit directly on the Freeborn Falls of the Red River. Renewing Management is reimagining the entire Novitiate property, including the 35-room 1939 Georgian-style limestone mansion that has been vacant since 1975.

Vegetables abound on farm near Red River

FRESH Project utilizes pair of gardens on farm to provide fresh produce to food pantries

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

The price of food has put a strain on people's wallets, but then there are the folks who couldn't afford food anyway.

With higher food prices, it can be a challenge for local food pantries to purchase food on a budget to help those in need.

Enter the FRESH Project and its gardens on a piece of property near Red River, as well as a small but dedicated group of volunteers that keep the gardens thriving by disposing of the weeds and harvesting vegetables that are collected twice weekly on Mondays and Thursdays by various food pantries, including Safe Haven, Shawano Area Food Pantry and Resource Center, Divine Savior Lutheran Church, St. Michael's Catholic Church, Flo'ing With Kindness in Gresham and the Navarino Food Pantry, to name a few.

There are two plots that are roughly 400 square feet together, according to Dave Mendoza, executive director for the FRESH Project.

"What we're basically doing is growing food to give to the various food pantries in the area," Mendoza said.

Sue Hennigan, who owns Red River Farm, where the pair of gardens are located, has donated the land since 2018 to the FRESH Project for its food efforts, but she also volunteers to keep the garden tended. In a three-week period, Hennigan and her volunteers have harvested 250 pounds of vegetables for the food pantries, including green beans, potatoes and more.

Initially, one plot was used to grow the vegetables for the FRESH Project, which operates farmers markets and Share the Bounty tables in a number of food deserts throughout Yavapai County, and it had operated a mobile food market that was discontinued this year. Now, however, there is a need for more food, so the second plot was added last fall.

"It started with a conversation over muffins and coffee," said Barb Mendoza, founder of the FRESH Project and its current finance director. "She called me and said, 'How can I help?' Then we sat and talked about it, and that's how the garden grew."

Hennigan retired in December 2018 and already had a smaller garden for herself, but she wanted to do more. She said that she'd barely hung up the phone on that initial call, and Barb Mendoza was at her doorstep.

"I love gardening, and I like to be busy and fill my time," Hennigan said. "When I saw the ad about the FRESH Project, I wondered if it would connect somehow."

Hennigan noted that the volunteers that help out at her farm are dedicated, working hard to make sure the vegetables grow.

"Our motto now is 'Plant it, and they will come,'" Hennigan said.

Food issues can be linked to affordability, according to Dave Mendoza, with "healthy food" tending to be the most expensive items in a grocery store.

"I think this is great that food pantries now have a local resource for fresh produce," he said. "It's not processed. It's harvested that morning. Some pantries give it away right away, and some might refrigerate it, but at least the recipients have fresh produce instead of shelf-stable, highly processed food."

Mendoza said he's also hoping to get people to eat the produce in a healthier way instead of frying it or boiling all the nutrients out of it in a pot of water.

"Hopefully, this is getting people to eat fresh fruits and raw produce," he said. "We just harvested some fresh sugar snap peas that are pretty good raw."

Normally, Hennigan uses runoff from her rain barrels to water the produce, but with Wisconsin experiencing drought conditions, she's having to bring out her hose a lot more to moisten the soil.

"It's been a weird year," Hennigan said. "Even without the rain, there's been a lot growing. I've been concentrating on the tomatoes and the cabbages and the plants with the rainwater in both gardens. If I don't have the rainwater, I have a hose that I can haul out."

The FRESH Project, when it first came into being in 2015, surveyed the area to see what the biggest needs were, and most replied the top issue was having fresh produce for the people they serve.

"That's why we first started the garden to help support our pantries with our Share the Bounty tables," said Barb Mendoza.

She added that the grants that funded the mobile market fell through, but even with the grants, the FRESH Project wasn't breaking even on the program, which is why it's better at the moment to have the produce go directly to the food pantries.

Even with the dedicated volunteers who care for the garden, the FRESH Project can use more help, according to Dave Mendoza. Hennigan added the garden would not be possible without them.

For information about the gardens, contact Dave Mendoza at 715-526-5206 or dave@thefreshproject.org.

Menominee traditions include touch of wild rice

Wild rice is an important part of who we are as Menominee; but as a chef — a Menominee chef — it sits as one of my top ingredients to choose from. This gluten free “good berry” is a go-to must in the culinary world.

I’ve been cooking professionally for almost 20 years; most of my experience is in Japanese cuisine. So what does that have to do with my now Indigenous-fusion catering business? Well, rice, of course. Rice is used in pilafs, risottos, flours for sauces, soups, desserts and even drinks. Rice is a dietary staple for more than half the world’s population.

I’m sometimes asked what is a Menominee recipe, or what is the name of a Menominee dish. After hours spent searching, we have come across some pretty cool recipes and techniques along the way, but we still have a long way to go. I guess that’s a part of reclaiming some of our culture.

Wild rice is a traditional food that we see in ceremonies, gatherings and other events. My goal is to not only keep some of those traditional techniques alive, but to also introduce contemporary uses of wild rice. Use it in some of our everyday meals, on a Tuesday, use it as a flour to thicken our gravy. Make it a comfort food. It can be popped like popcorn for a healthy dessert topping or to crust a fish as we see in our recipe chosen today.

There are different applications for our types of wild rice. Our black paddy wild rice is slightly more dense and is great for popping. Wood-parched rice has more of our traditional flavor profile from being cooked over wood fire and is great for our pilafs. Those broken bits of rice? Use them in soups, or puree them to make a binder for some meatballs.

All of these versions of wild rice can be found at Save a Lot in Keshena.

Wild rice has a myriad of uses to the Menominee people, but it can be used to provide a tasty crust to salmon filets and other meats.

Also our local Menominee Food Distribution distributes wild rice from an Indigenous provider from Minnesota.

Reclaiming some of the Menominee culture through our foods like wild rice is no easy task. There are no classes in culinary school that teach Indigenous foods. I can tell you that wild rice is high in protein and has a neutral pH, which makes it perishable once cooked. I can tell you its holding and cooking temps, but the cultural

WILD RICE CRUSTED SALMON

6 ounces salmon filet (skinless)
1 1/2 cups uncooked wild rice
2 teaspoons paprika
2 teaspoons garlic powder
2 teaspoons onion powder
2 tablespoons maple syrup or honey
Salt and pepper to taste
2 tablespoons sunflower oil

In a saute pan, medium heat, add uncooked wild rice. The rice will begin to pop, keep shaking the pan. Once the rice stops making noise, then take it out of the pan. Place rice inside a grinder or bowl. Grind rice just to loosen and release more aromatics. Keep it coarse. Add spices. Brush maple or honey over fish. Cover fish in wild rice flour mix. Heat saute pan to medium heat. Add oil and saute fish both sides until internal temp of 145 degrees. Serve, enjoy.

business can spear point the way for younger Menominee chefs.

Wild rice, although it is Indigenous and important to us Menominee, it’s good for all of us as humans. It has fiber, antioxidants, folate, magnesium, phosphorus and other vitamins. No matter what language we speak, its health benefits are good for all of us.

Let’s go out there and try some wild rice recipes, make your own recipes, experiment, and don’t be afraid to make some mistakes in the kitchen. Wild rice was a gift to us, and it’s still here, as are we the Menominee people.

FARM LIFE FROM A FARM WIFE

Journey to Alaska does not include duffle bag

For years, my husband has talked about going on a cruise to Alaska. I just listened, not really thinking this would actually happen. He doesn't care at all to fly, really does not like the water (Farmers on the ocean? A contradiction of terms), and both of those events would most definitely be involved on a cruise to Alaska. Evidently, he squashed his fears.

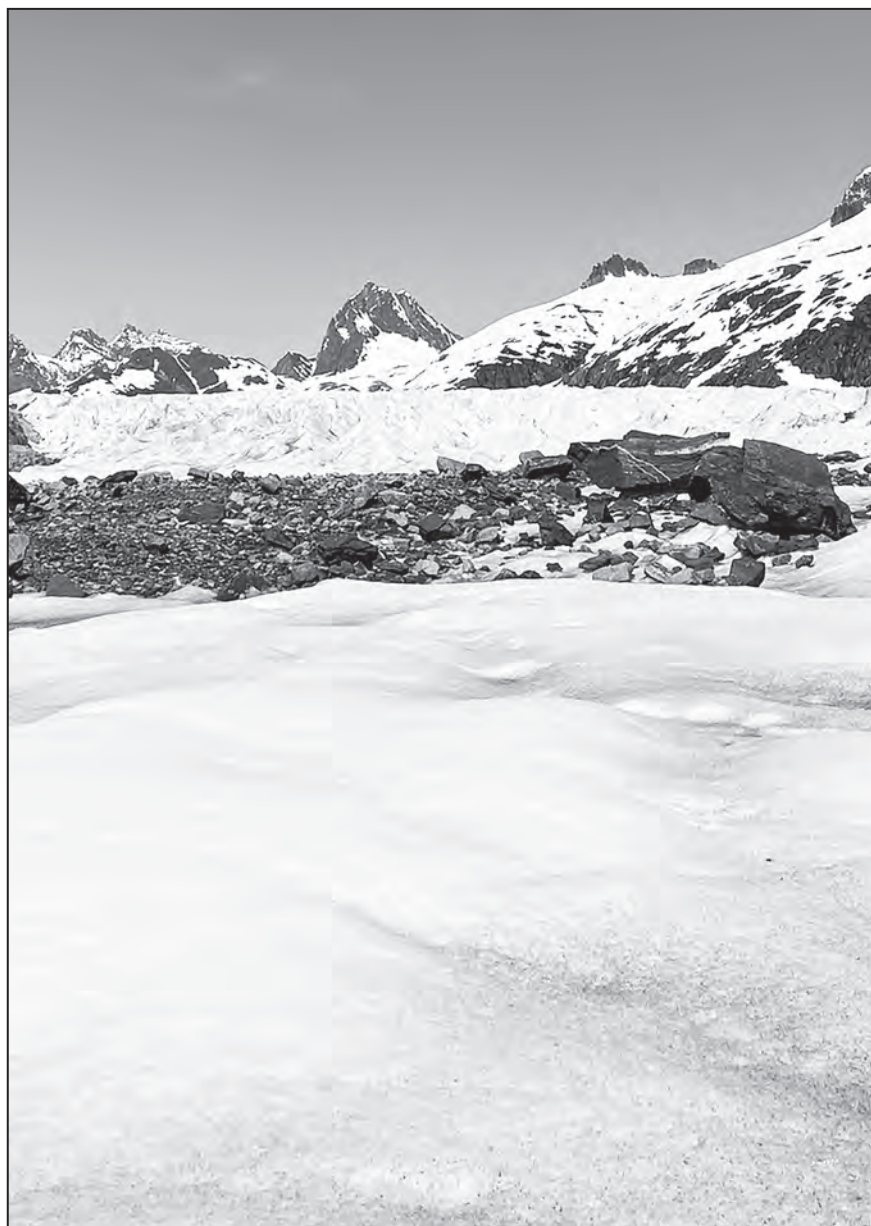

He started doing some research and contacted our personal travel agent, Tyler Dillenburg, owner of Travel With Ty (www.travelwithty.com). We've known this young man since he was in high school and is a good buddy of one of our sons. When we decided on a date, Tyler got busy and made it happen, 10 days total, seven on board ship and remaining three touring on land, rounding out the vacation with a meandering train excursion, watching moose graze, complete with a delicious meal served in the train's diner.

It was everything we could have imagined and much more. The mountains were spectacular, the ocean endless. We flew out of Milwaukee and grabbing a connecting flight in Chicago, flew to Vancouver, British Columbia. We are such travel novices, good thing my brother and sister-in-law were along. She, being the more experienced, kept us on task as we literally ran through more than one airport during the return trip.

Because of our greenhorn status, we created quite the dilemma, noticing when eating our first meal onboard ship that we didn't have one carry-on. Yes, we left a carry-on at the Vancouver airport. An unmarked, grey duffle bag. Red flag, anyone? As in bring on the bomb sniffing dogs?

Inside was our 10-day supply of homeopathic vitamins, as well as prescription pills and a little bag complete with every sort of pain a pill could manage, from arthritic to head. Yes. Plus my husband's toothbrush, toothpaste, sunglasses, deodorant and four buck magazines he had hoarded for the trip. (So he could forget he was thousands of feet in the air.)

We went from shock to dismay to action. Locating the ship's customer service desk, we inquired if there were any unmarked bags that might have miraculously made their way onboard. No. Every day

While Wisconsin has been experiencing drought conditions, there was plenty of water available on top of a glacier in Alaska to fill water bottles.

KAY REMINGER

for three days as we slowly cruised 700 miles up the shore of Alaska we inquired. No. My sister-in-law never lost hope nor ceased in praying we'd somehow get our bag back. Hang on, as Paul Harvey would say, "for the rest of the story."

We decided to stop fretting and enjoy this once-in-a-lifetime experience. Buying deodorant, toothbrush and toothpaste and borrowing some things as needed from my family, we settled in. We had a stateroom complete with an ocean-view window. We experienced 18 hours of sunlight a day during the season we visited that beautiful state, never seeing the stars. When it was time for sleep, we pulled our black-out curtains shut to block out the sun, and every night the ship lulled us into slumber land. It was the best sleep we've ever had during a vacation.

However, the day after we set sail, I awoke to my belly telling my head oh-oh. Squeamish to say the least. After a Dramamine, a Cream of Wheat breakfast and a prayer to please, Jesus, calm the wind, the waves stopped waving. I was fine then, and so grateful I did not have another incident. The off-balance episode was baffling, and I felt totally helpless, kept trying to talk myself out of it.

The scenery — viewing majestic mountains, glaciers and icebergs took our breath away. Cruising close to Hubbard glacier, the ship's captain slowed the boat down, rotating in a 360-degree turn so everyone on board could see the grandiose of the glacier. Perfect weather; many days were unseasonably warm.

At one port, we had reserved a helicopter ride to the top of a glacier. Before taking off, we watched to a video explaining stringent safety rules and were given boots with spikes to pull over our shoes. Getting hooked up to headsets, we were able to correspond with each other and listen to our guide during the ride. I took an empty bottle along and scooped up free-running, ice-cold-fresh glacier water. It was delicious.

The next stop we took a gondola ride going 1,500 feet straight up. My sister-in-law and husband do not like heights, and this one got them nervous. Never mind they had boarded a couple of jets and rode in a helicopter. For some reason, this was nerve racking, but the sights were stunning. Other on-shore excursions included bear watching and nature hikes.

Onboard ship, the entertainment was endless: movie theater, game shows, trivial contests, billiard room, spa, on-deck pools and food, ready at any time. At one point, they held a disco night. There were people watching from eight stories of balconies, and yes, we even made it on the dance floor. It wasn't pretty, but we had a riot. What a blast from the past.

Next column, I'll conclude our once-in-a-lifetime adventure and provide a closure to the missing duffle bag. To be continued ...

("Before the mountains were born or You brought forth the whole world, from everlasting to everlasting, You are God." Psalm 90:2)

Kay Reminger was born and raised on a dairy farm, and she married her high school sweetheart, who happened to farm for a living in Leopolis. Writing for quite a few years, she remains focused on the blessings of living the ups and downs of rural life from a farm wife's perspective.

New faces learn the ropes in Green Bay

Fans, playbook, technique on the mind of newcomers

By LUKE REIMER
Correspondent

While making the transition from a new team or from college to the NFL can be tough, Packer players in that role in training camp have seized the rare opportunity to play for the 13-time champions.

Not only was Aaron Rodgers lost in the offseason, but key Green Bay contributors like Adrian Amos, Allen Lazard and Dean Lowry have new homes as well. To supplement what it lost in the offseason, Green Bay took their chances by selecting 13 players in the 2023 NFL Draft, as well as adding a handful of rookies and veterans in free agency.

One rookie, Michigan State alumni Jayden Reed, will likely have somewhat of a spotlight on him this year. After Green Bay lost Davante Adams two years ago and Lazard and Randall Cobb this year, the Packers look very thin at receiver. Outside of the lack of depth at the position, there is close to zero experience from the receiving core. While Reed can't provide that experience immediately, he is taking training camp one day at a time to ingratiate himself into not only the offense, but the city of Green Bay as well.

"I am glad to be here," said Reed. "For me personally, it is nice to have these (organized team activities) to get the playbook down. I am starting to feel a little more confident out there, so it has been great."

Reed is no stranger to being relied on for production, as in his five years in college, between Western Michigan and Michigan State, he has totaled 203 receptions for 2,866 yards and 26 touchdowns. That production is the easy part though. What really tests those players who make the jump from college is understanding an NFL playbook.

"The playbook is a lot longer and the plays are a lot bigger," said Reed. "In college, you have signals; here you have to listen. That is the biggest difference that I would have to say. I am just trying to build my confidence in that and give my best. Outside of (team activities), I text coach when I am at home to try and get the plays and just ask him what I have on this. It takes a lot — you need to study that inside and out."

Another player who is in the same boat as Reed when it comes to the playbook is quarterback Alex McGough.

"I am the new guy here — I am just trying to learn as much as possible and once you learn it, it is about trying to slow it down," said McGough. "I am just trying learn it enough to where I am not thinking about it and I can start seeing the defense and making adjustments off of that."

The 27-year old bounced around the NFL for the first couple years in his career, before finding a home on the Birmingham Stallions last year in the United States Football League. McGough proved that he should get another shot in the NFL after leading the USFL in passing touchdowns, passer rating and completion percentage in 2023. For these efforts, McGough was named USFL MVP.

He has spent time with the Seattle Seahawks, Houston Texans and Jacksonville Jaguars in his NFL career. Now in Green Bay, the Florida International alum has noticed a number of differences in Tittletown.

"The facility is unbelievable — they have everything that you need," said McGough. "They have good nutrition. They have a psychologist — they just run it right. The tradition of riding bikes and the fans staying after and talking to you — you know? It is my fourth day and everybody knew my name. You don't see that anywhere else."

Seventh-round pick Lew Nichols III shared similar thoughts to McGough about the die-hard fans coming to practice, detailing the energy at practice from the crowd.

"Man, it is a lot of energy, I'll tell you it is a lot of energy," said Nichols. "You have got guys flying around and making plays and then hearing the crowd go crazy — it is just a fun time out there. All that good energy just makes you continue to go harder and play hard. We definitely appreciate it."

Like Reed, Nichols also noted that difference in an NFL practice compared to a college practice.

"The game is faster and you have to adjust to a whole new playbook, a whole new group of guys that you are going to war with and a whole new coaching staff," said Nichols. "At the end of the day, I just try to focus on the good things. We are playing professional football, a kids game, so every time you get out there, take advantage of it. You just need to be grateful for everything."

Another rookie who is expected to play a large role in Green Bay's offense this year is South Dakota State tight end Tucker Kraft. Kraft was one of two tight ends selected by Green Bay this year (in addition to Luke Musgrave). While he continues to learn the playbook and continues to learn what NFL life is like, Kraft said that he is working on hammering down the little stuff in training camp.

"All of the stuff that we are installing over the next few days, we have already learned. So it is just a matter of how fast can you adjust to the information, and then continuing to get good at the monotony of the grind," said Kraft. "The techniques, where I place my hand — all of the little stuff — just getting better at that stuff now."

He added that the offseason with its organized team activities has been busy but, in turn, has been a great opportunity to develop.

"When you are in OTAs and you have that whole spring season to learn the playbook and adjust, then it's like riding a bike," said Kraft.

Bonds, friendships built in California

Love, Jones, receivers talk about what summer sessions can do for the team

By LUKE REIMER
Correspondent

With the departure of Aaron Rodgers and other key players, the Green Bay Packers are in somewhat of a transition year.

With 13 draft picks and many new faces on the team, it seems likely that there will be some growing pains on the team this season. To help ease that transition, Jordan Love and a majority of the Green Bay Packers offense traveled to California to get in a summer workout.

After reports last year of young pass catchers having trouble with signals from Rodgers, it is a bright sight for Packers fans to see Love organize a summer workout session with his projected receiving core. A large of part of building a professional team comes down to the chemistry and how well the players get along. Starting the summer in California is a great start to building that chemistry.

“We had a good time out there,” said Love on the workout sessions. “In the offseason, we got a couple of workouts in and just got to get back and ball with the guys. Usually in the offseason, you are throwing with other people that don’t run the same routes that you do in your offense, so to just to be able to have that familiarity and build those connections with those guys was awesome.”

More than just throwing the football, the players took their bond-building to the next level in California, as they went out to dinner and even went bowling with each other.

“Jordan is a pretty good bowler,” said Packers running back Aaron Jones, which was met with laughter. “He got like five strikes in a row. I want to say he bowled like a 220 or something like that. I am at about 150s, 160s.”

Jones also spoke on what it means to the players and the team to have Love organize the meeting.

“He cares about the guys in this locker room; he wants to be successful, and he wants us to be successful,” said Jones. “He wants us clicking when we got back here to make it easier on the coaches and ourselves. We have gone through that playbook, we have gotten that conditioning in and we have got that time bonding by going out to eat and bowling.”

He counted eight players who joined Love in California, calling the experience rare and fun.

“It made it fun — just getting that time together that you don’t normally get to spend together,” said Jones. “You are in the facility all day and then from there you just want to go home and spend time with your family, so just really being able to bond and getting to know each other on a different level and just enjoying each other — I feel like that is how you grow as a team and grow as a family.”

Wide receiver Romeo Doubs also spoke on what it means to grow with Love as he continues to learn how to be a starting quarterback in the NFL.

“It was a great session within that week that we had,” said Doubs. “Jordan, Danny (Etling) and some of the receivers had a plan to get together and meet up with them to continue to grow with them, because we all are in this together.”

Given the lack of experience at the receiver position, getting out of Green Bay and just hanging out and working out with each other can only be a good sign for the passing game this season. Last season, Rodgers and Love combined for 3,890 passing yards and 27 passing touchdowns. While it may be difficult to repeat those numbers, players like Christian Watson are just excited to get back on to the field and try to help Love recreate those numbers.

“It helps us build that bond and that friendship between us,” said Watson. “It is just huge to build those relationships outside of the facility.”

As for Watson, there should be a lot of eyes on him as well as Doubs and Love. Last year during training camp, Watson was injured and missed a lot of desired time. Now healthy, Watson is walking around with confidence and has his eyes set on another big season.

Pulaski sees Legion season end at AA State

Team goes 0-2 in Ashwaubenon

By DUSTIN RIESE
Correspondent

After seven weeks of American Legion baseball this summer, the Pulaski Legion squad saw its season come to an end at the AA State tournament in Ashwaubenon. Pulaski went 0-2 during the weekend.

In its first game, Pulaski played Region 1 winner River Falls. Despite River Falls taking the victory 11-1, this game was much closer than it seemed as a series of errors led to countless unearned runs that ultimately doomed Pulaski in the end.

"The effort was there, but the result was not," coach Tate McMillan said. "I was very happy with our pitching overall as they did a great job battling and trying to get out of jams. River Falls did a much better job putting the ball in play than we did today, and our defense didn't play well early, which made things tough for us."

River Falls ace Eli Condon kept the Pulaski bats grounded early on as a first inning error helped lead to two runs and gave River Falls a 2-0 lead. Had they not scored the rest of the way, those two runs would have been enough, but the Wildcats offense was far from finished.

Following a scoreless second from Tate Gerth, he ran into instant trouble in the third as River Falls loaded the bases three batters in. A fielder's choice followed that up to pick up the first out, but it was a pair of singles from Condon and Cody Olson that extended the lead to 4-0. On the verge of getting out of the inning with minimal damage, the Pulaski defense continued to struggle as another error led to two more runs with an additional single from Ty Manninen making things 8-0 after three.

The lone run of the game for Pulaski came in the fourth, and it came as a gift from the Wildcats. Bryce Wotruba led things off with a single before advancing to second on a Cade Dorn single two batters later. On the verge of getting out of the inning without any damage, Condon struck out Eric Dorn for what looked to be the final out — only to have the ball get by the catcher to allow Dorn to reach. There was also a throwing error on that play that allowed Wotruba to score; Pulaski was on the board but trailing 8-1.

Pulaski's Hunter Money leaps to catch a throw at the base.

After taking over for Gerth in the third, Brett Schott was back out to pitch the fourth and made quick work of the Wildcats offense. The same can be said about the fifth as a huge double play helped offset a pair of singles as Pulaski was starting to get in a groove on the mound. Despite cruising along through five, Condon was lifted from the game to begin the sixth and was replaced by Hayden Bottolfson.

That move nearly backfired in a big way as he walked Gavin Ostrenga to begin the inning before hitting Cade Dorn. Following a strikeout, Eric Dorn came through with an infield hit as Pulaski had the bases loaded with a chance to strike. Unfortunately, they couldn't do anything with it as a double play ended the inning and kept River Falls in front 8-1 before they would tack on three more runs in the sixth to win 11-1.

McMillan knows his offense needs to play better if they want to go deeper into the weekend.

"We did a much better job putting the ball in play today, which has been an issue at times," he said. "However, we didn't do much with those hits as we need to figure out how to cash in these runs."

Needing a win on Saturday to keep their season alive, Pulaski took on the New London Clippers in a win-or-go-home game. Despite their offense putting up much better numbers and pushing across six runs, it was their pitching that let them down as the Clippers plated nine runs to send Pulaski home 9-6.

All of the New London runs came in the first three innings as they had a pair of four-run frames. Trailing 4-1 in the second, Pulaski battled back as their offense wanted to show they deserved to play another day. A hit by pitch led things off with Cade Dorn picking up a single to put two on with no outs. Pulaski would eventually load the bases with two outs as Caden Rybacki cleared the bases with an RBI double to bring things back to even 4-4.

That would be as close as Pulaski would get. New London not only retook the lead in the bottom of the second, they also added four more to seize control 9-4. That score would hold until the final inning when Zach Brodhagen and Money delivered a pair of RBI singles to pull within 9-6. They would fall by that same score.

Wittenberg earns 16U runner-up finish at state

Team falls twice to La Crosse A's

By DUSTIN RIESE
Correspondent

Coming off a very successful regular season, the Wittenberg 16U Legion team turned their attention to the state tournament in Waupun in late July. Looking to start their double elimination tournament with a bang, Wittenberg rode the arm of Hayden Miller to pick up an 8-3 win over Campbellsport.

"I thought we played a very good defensive game as an entire unit," coach Jeff Miller said after defeating Campbellsport. "We had a solid pitching performance across the board against a very good hitting team. Fortunately, we were able to string together some timely hits late which helped us take care of business today."

Hayden Miller was about as good as you can get as he gave Wittenberg 6 2/3 innings on the mound, allowing three runs on seven hits. He walked four and struck out five before Hudson Miller came on to pitch the final out. Hayden Miller wasn't alone in having a great game as Braden Bothe matched him pitch for pitch through three innings before being removed from the game to begin the fourth.

With the score knotted 0-0 to begin the fourth, the Wittenberg offense started to come to life as they scored eight runs across the next four innings, including two in the fourth. A leadoff walk to Carson Meverden opened the inning with a hit by pitch following suit. Throw in a pair of fielders' choice plays, including an RBI fielder's choice from Keegan Benbo, and Wittenberg grabbed the 2-0 lead and never looked back.

Campbellsport managed to pick up a run in their half of the fourth on a Carson Heisdorf single, but that was it as Wittenberg extended their lead to 4-1 on the Bryson Schmid double in the fifth. Like in the fourth when Wittenberg first broke through, Campbellsport refused to go down quietly as an RBI double from Jace Goebel made things 4-2 before they added another run late.

This was as close as Campbellsport would get as the Wittenberg offense used a sixth-inning two-out rally to bust the game wide open. What started with a pair of walks was followed by the Oliver Fraaza single as the lead grew to 5-3. Zandy Barke would then deliver the big blow of the inning as his RBI triple cleared the bases to give Wittenberg the 7-3 lead. They would go on to add another run later in the game before the Miller boys closed things out to give Wittenberg the 8-3 win to open the tournament.

"Hayden was phenomenal on the hill for us today," Jeff Miller said. "Going six innings is never easy against a team like this, and he made it look easy at times. Hayden did a great job of mixing his pitches up, which kept their offense off balance all day."

Wittenberg falls to La Crosse A's

After coming away with an impressive opening round win, Wittenberg turned their attention to the La Crosse A's and their 20-3-2 record. Wittenberg found out the hard way how good this La Crosse team is as a pair of three-run innings proved too much in the 12-4 defeat.

One inning into this one, Wittenberg found themselves down big as La Crosse struck for three runs in the first. They would go on to add five more the next three innings as they opened up an 8-0 lead after four innings of play.

It took five innings for Wittenberg to break through as La Crosse gifted them their first run. Not only did a hit by pitch open things up, but an error and a walk loaded the bases with one out. Eddie Nowinsky followed that up with a sacrifice fly to make things 8-1, but things could have been worse.

Trailing 10-1 in the sixth, Wittenberg continued to make some late game noise as Conner Meverden used a two-run double to make things 10-3. He would later come around to score on the Chris Sipple single, but that was the final run they would score in what was a 12-4 defeat.

Wittenberg tops Germantown, Tomah, Seymour

Following their tough loss to La

Crosse on July 22, Wittenberg was put in a win or go home situation July 23 as that was their motto the rest of the way.

Apparently that was enough motivation for them as they dominated Germantown 9-1 to book a spot in the semifinal match on July 24. They then proceeded to knock off Tomah in their most dominating performance of the week as they advanced to face Seymour with a 16-4 victory.

Looking to book a trip to the state championship game later in the day on July 25, Wittenberg first had to take care of some business as they had to beat Seymour just to get to the state championship game. Wittenberg came out strong by not only scoring in the first inning but opening up a 4-1 lead as they appeared to have the game in hand. Seymour did a great job rallying back and pulled within 4-3 and even had the tying run on second base in the seventh before coming up short in the end.

Wittenberg eliminated by A's

Already with an impressive weekend under their belt, Wittenberg took the field for the final time in 2023 as the La Crosse A's awaited them for the state title.

La Crosse gave Wittenberg their lone loss up to this point at the state tournament, knocking them off 12-4 on July 22, and this was no different as the A's took care of Wittenberg 11-0. Wittenberg's dream season came to an end with a state runner-up finish.

Accidental 9-1-1 calls up in Shawano County

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

Efforts by cellphone companies to increase security on the devices people use are wreaking havoc on 9-1-1 dispatch centers all over, and Shawano County is no different.

In 2022, the county received 2,193 9-1-1 calls, where the emergency number is called, but no one answers on the other end of the line. Sheriff George Lenzner informed NEW Media the county has already eclipsed that number in 2023, with 2,233 unanswered emergency calls taken by dispatchers as of July 23, putting the county on track to possibly double the number of calls. Lenzner said that accidental 9-1-1 calls are currently the number one call for service that his deputies respond to.

"In the (previous) three years, we average 1,200 to 1,600 calls as of July 23," Lenzner said. "We are on track to have a record year, which was set in 2021."

Because dispatchers have no way of knowing if the 9-1-1 call is accidental or not, deputies often have to check the area or contact the caller to make sure everything is all right. With Shawano County being large in terms of distance, it can take up a lot of law enforcement's time to investigate these calls, which happen multiple times on any given day.

"The cell companies are trying to make it as easy as they can for people to get a hold of emergency services when they need it with pushing buttons and holding, pushing buttons so many times," said Kasy Cross, the county's communications supervisor. "If you have a fall detected, they will call. It's great for those instances when it's needed, but it also increases the number of accident calls that come to us. You drop your phone, and it's going to think somebody fell, and it's going to call us."

Those who accidentally call 9-1-1 should stay on the line and not hang up, according to Cross. They should confirm with the dispatcher who and where they are and inform them that there are no issues or emergencies.

"We're always going to assume it's a legitimate 9-1-1 emergency that we have to follow up and

DID YOU KNOW?

A lot of these accidental 9-1-1 calls come from accidental SOS activations on cellphones and smart watches. There are great benefits to these features, but if you don't know how to use them, and don't foresee yourself using these features, do the following to disable the SOS feature on your phone or watch:

- Android: Open your phone's Settings app. Tap Safety and Emergency SOS. Turn off Use Emergency SOS.
- iPhone: Go to Settings. Turn "Call with Hold and Release" on or off. Hold and release the side and volume buttons to start a countdown to call emergency services. Turn "Call with 5 presses" on or off: Rapidly press the side button five times to start a countdown to call emergency services.
- Apple Watch: Open the Watch app on your iPhone, then tap the My Watch tab. Tap Emergency SOS. Turn off Hold Side Button to Dial.

make sure everything's OK," Cross said. "I'd rather know that somebody's going to check and not ignore it."

In 2022, dispatchers answered over 11,000 9-1-1 calls, according to Cross, which means about one in five were accidental calls. So far, there have been around 7,700 calls to this point in 2023, meaning over 25% of the calls received were accidental.

"As they (the companies) make things easier, it's also easier to make those accidental calls," Cross said.

Cross is encouraging cellphone users to read their manuals when they get a new phone, realizing many don't.

"Be familiar with what you have on your phone, what kind of features you have," she said. "See if you can turn it off if it's something you don't need."

The sheriff's dispatch is implementing a program called Prepared Live, where dispatchers can send a text to the phones asking if everything is all right. Usually once a reply is received, the matter is closed, Cross said.

"Instead of us taking the time to make a phone call back and try to leave a message or get a hold of somebody, we have this ability to send a text, so people may start seeing these text messages from us," Cross said. "It doesn't show our phone number, but it does kind of identify us as the sheriff's department. Unfortunately, with how many pranks are out there, I understand people are kind of hesitant to give information, but don't be surprised if we do reach out via text. It will legitimately be us."

Cross added that anyone still unsure can contact the sheriff's department directly at 715-526-7901.

Cellcom improving reception in Shawano, Oconto counties

Wireless usage continues to climb and the desire for cellular connections stretches beyond cities and towns to rural lakes, trails, and forests.

Local wireless provider Cellcom has significantly invested in its network in Oconto and Shawano counties to deliver strong wireless service to area residents and visitors. Eight cell sites were activated in the last year to help fill in coverage gaps and further enhance the overall wireless experience.

"As demand for cell service continues to increase, particularly data, these new cell sites also move users off high-traffic sites, which helps improve everyone's experience," said Rick Brooks, vice president of engineering for Cellcom. "Over the past year, we also added capacity at every site in Shawano and Oconto counties to deliver faster speeds, more connections at one time or additional coverage. The extra capacity is particularly beneficial during tourism season when we typically see traffic explode as visitors pour into the area."

The activated new sites are located throughout Oconto County in Oconto, Oconto Falls and the towns of Breed, Riverview, Little Suamico, Townsend, Bagley and Lakewood. An additional site is under way in Oconto.

Cellcom is planning to add small cells for further network enhancements. Small cells are miniature, low-powered cell sites placed in more densely populated areas to further improve the wireless experience. Cellcom has active small cells in Shawano, as well.

"Small cells blend into their surroundings and help in busy commerce areas, near schools or by venues where large events are held. We are planning small cells in Oconto Falls, Suring, and Peshtigo later this year," said Brooks. "Despite their small size, they can take as long to plan and implement as a full-size cell site. Our teams are already planning for enhancements in future years."

Community partnership to help Native students

At the Kehtekaewak Farmer’s Market on Aug. 11, the College of Menominee Nation, the National Indian Education Association (NIEA), Core Learning Exchange and Bowler School District will officially reveal a newly finished mobile construction lab, as well as showcase the programs, such as virtual reality, that are taking place.

NIEA received $500,000 and was one of 25 winners of the Catalyze Grant Challenge. The challenge aims to fund and share ideas that rethink the connections among K-12, post-secondary education and career for students in grades 6-12, with a focus on reaching students from historically underrepresented backgrounds.

This project, “‘Building’ Career Pathways for Native Students,” is a middle school to post-secondary pathway that utilizes community resources and partnerships to build interest and credentialing for construction trades. The project is open to all students, but emphasizes utilizing the tribal college access to build a Native workforce for the Menominee, Oneida and Stockbridge-Munsee tribes.

The first year of funding has enabled the partners to:

- Build a mobile construction lab for hands-on practice for the schools, colleges or local partners who have projects for on-site training for students.
- Develop a council of partners that represent tribal and business in the region that have committed to this work through job shadowing opportunities and supplies.
- Include virtual reality headsets and courses for middle school students for exploratory simulations of careers.
- Implement middle and high school online curricula for career-connected learning in trade, IT, graphic design, health care and more.

CMN will kick off the festivities with remarks by Christopher Caldwell, president of the college; Diana Cournoyer, executive director of NIEA; and local and national project partners and supporters. This event will be livestreamed through media channels, and Catalyze funders will share the event as well.
