'Stay home' clear message from officials

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The White House on Monday urged all older Americans to stay home and people of all ages to avoid crowds and eating out at restaurants.

President Donald Trump and the coronavirus task force at its daily briefing released the guidelines as the U.S. government moved to try to blunt the impact of the virus, racing to bolster testing and aid even as financial markets fell and Americans scrambled to reorder their lives.

Among the new recommendations: Over the next 15 days, Americans should not gather in groups of more than 10 people, schooling should be at home and discretionary travel and social visits should be avoided. If anyone in a household tests positive for the virus, everyone who lives there should stay home.

The president, in an appearance in the White House briefing room, when asked when the pandemic would subside, said that "if we do a really good job" the crisis could pass by July or August, a far less optimistic take than in his earlier predictions that it could be over within weeks.

The U.S. surgeon general said Monday that the United States is about where Italy was two weeks ago in the coronavirus struggle, a sign that infections are expected to rise.

"We are at a critical inflection point in this country, people," Surgeon General Dr. Jerome Adams told Fox News. "When you look at the projections, there's every chance that we could be Italy." Yet he said the U.S. has opportunities to mitigate the pandemic.

The administration did not immediately define what an "older American" was in terms of the recommendation to stay home.

Trump has implored Americans not to hoard groceries and supplies, saying there is no need to do so, as the White House works to get diagnostic testing much more widely available after lagging on that front for weeks. It was not considering enacting or recommending a nationwide curfew, nor enacting limits on domestic travel, according to a senior administration official who spoke on condition of anonymity to address spiraling rumors.

On Monday, national security officials said there had been a cyberattack involving the computer networks of Health and Human Services, but the networks were operating normally. They didn't detail the nature or scope of the problem or identify the foreign entity.

The U.S. effort has been hobbled by a series of missteps, including flaws with the testing kits first distributed by the federal government and bureaucratic hurdles that held up testing by private laboratories.

Brett Giroir, a senior health administration official, said community testing sites manned by the Federal Emergency Management Agency and members of the U.S. public health service would be capable of testing 2,000 to 4,000 people each day, not every week. He said the federal government would begin deploying these sites on Monday.

Also expected is updated federal guidance on restaurants, bars and other establishments. California and Illinois are among jurisdictions that have ordered restaurants and bars to close to help slow the spread of the virus.

Nearby, the Supreme Court said it is postponing arguments for late March and early April because of the coronavirus, including a round over subpoenas for Trump's financial records.

Other court business will go on as planned, like the justices' private conference Friday and the release of orders in a week's time. Some justices may participate by telephone, the court said in a statement. Six of the nine justices are 65 and older. That puts them at higher risk of getting very sick from the illness if they are exposed, according to demographic guidance from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The last time oral arguments were postponed was in 1918, due to the Spanish flu epidemic. In 2001, they were relocated, but not postponed, after an anthrax scare.

Larry Kudlow, director of the National Economic Council, said the White House is working toward $800 billion in fiscal relief, with about half of that having been approved through executive actions and legislation and much of the remainder being sought through a payroll tax cut that has been met coolly by both parties in Congress.

The worldwide outbreak has sickened about 175,000 people and left more than 6,700 dead.

Kevin Hassett, a former White House economic adviser said the global economy is sliding into a recession and forecast a "very terrible" second quarter for the U.S., with negative economic growth. Hassett said the April jobs report could show as many as 1 million jobs lost due to the coronavirus.

"I think that the odds of a global recession are close to 100% right now," Hassett told CNN on Monday.

Also, the White House said Monday it would cancel the holiday Easter Egg Roll held annually on the South Lawn.

Information current as of March 16, 2020, at 2:44 p.m.

"We are at a critical inflection point in this country, people. When you look at the projections, there's every chance that we could be Italy."

It's time to work together against both disease and fear

At NEW Media, we have found that the amount of information, misinformation, and outright speculation has grown faster than anyone can keep track of.

Area schools, businesses, churches are already listening to the careful, reasoned cautions of public health officials and are taking steps to protect their families, customers and members.

We want to help you listen to them. That's why you'll find, in the print and web pages of the Shawano Leader, Wittenberg Enterprise and Birnamwood News and Oconto County Times Herald, the most accurate, fact-checked information about local impacts of COVID-19 that we can assemble.

We go to trusted sources. We don't speculate or feed rumors, and we will share what we know with you, in print and online.

If you go to www.newmedia-wi.com, you'll find a running list of announcement, closures and updates, with links to detailed COVID-19 stories. These stories are free and you can access them just by clicking on them.

Why does this matter? Because in the absence of facts, speculation makes things worse.

We end up thinking: "It's a national emergency. Let's buy toilet paper."

When we are threatened, we sometimes do things that are otherwise incomprehensible. We stockpile odd things. We cram into bars to drink our fears away, even though those may be places where we harm others just by being there.

We imagine the worst. What we don't do is listen.

We need to listen to timely, factual, practical information. Accurate information prevents a panic, saves money and can save lives.

When the public does not have accurate information, no one, absolutely no one, goes home, turns off the TV, dials down Facebook, and sits in the dark. We talk to friends, we wonder what is happening, and we fill in the blanks with our own imagination.

We're only human. We make stuff up. And the stuff that we make up can do a lot of damage.

The damage comes from improbable conspiracy theories, fear that some unknown entity is taking advantage of us, and worst of all, the notion that by ignoring threats they will somehow go away. Because, really, who knows what is going on?

The fact is that someone really does know. The "someone" is actually a collection of highly trained people whose only job is to monitor threats to public health, warn and educate us about them and find ways to cope with them. The state of Wisconsin Department of Health Services. The Center for Disease Control and Prevention. Emergency planners. Health professionals.

These are folks not only trained in tracking disease and preventing them, they are so apolitical that no one dare bring a car into their parking lot with a "Vote for" sticker on the bumper. They spend their lives preparing for an outbreak such as this one.

We need to listen to them. And as journalists, we are here to help you do that.

We will take enormous amounts of material, shake out the stuff that doesn't ring true, ask experts to verify, and present it in a way that is interesting and engaging to you. This is what the media does.

But, we're not just "the media." We are your neighbors. We have homes and children in this community. We have elderly, at-risk parents. We shop together, worship together, work together. And yes, we share your fears, about our health, about the economy. About today and about tomorrow.

We share your fears, but we realize that fear solves nothing. It is our job to listen, to verify as true, and to share whatever we can.

That's how we can serve our communities during this crisis. The news, advertising and support staff are here to help you cut through the clutter and find information you need to help you and your family make sound, careful decisions in the next several weeks.

It's a national emergency. Let's work together.

Familiar face comes back to Homme Home

Cieslewicz takes over Seybold's position as executive director

By MIRIAM NELSON
News Editor

WITTENBERG — There is a new executive director for Homme Inc. of Wisconsin, and he's got a familiar face.

Former Homme administrator Justin Cieslewicz was hired Jan. 13 to take over for longtime executive director Steve Seybold, who retired Feb. 25.

In 2009, Cieslewicz came to Homme to serve as the administrator, which he did for 8½ years. He holds a Bachelor of Science in health care administration from University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire. The program had an emphasis on aging services, and when he began a one-year practicum in a long-term care facility, he knew that area would be his passion. He went on to receive a Master of Business Administration from Cardinal Stritch University in Milwaukee.

"Upon completing my education with UWEC, I became a nursing home administrator for a facility in Green Bay," said Cieslewicz. "At that time, I was one of the youngest administrators in the state of Wisconsin."

He worked at the Green Bay nursing home for more than 1½ years before deciding to move back to central Wisconsin. The administrator position opened at Homme, and he felt fortunate to be offered the role.

"Growing up on my family's dairy farm between Plover and Wisconsin Rapids, I learned the value of a day's hard work. I knew, though, that I wanted to help people, and that is what drove me to health care administration," said Cieslewicz.

In fall 2017, he was offered a position with Aspirus Clinics in which he was granted the opportunity to work for a large health system and learn how to lead in a different realm of health care. He directed multiple clinic locations over a large geographic area.

"The role was interesting as I worked in a matrix type of position, working with professionals from multiple backgrounds. However, I realized that I missed working with the aging population," said Cieslewicz.

While working at Aspirus, he kept in contact with Seybold. When he learned of Seybold's pending retirement, Cieslewicz said he applied for the job and feels lucky to be named the new executive director. At the helm of the Homme Inc. of Wisconsin parent corporation, he oversees Homme Home for the Aging in Wittenberg as well as the Homme Foundation and the Homme Heights campus, Wausau.

His first major task has been to deal with the coronavirus. In addition to Homme's health and safety protocols, the company decided to add another layer of protection to residents by restricting visitors. Guests are only permitted in certain situations essential to a resident's emotional well-being or end-of-life care. Signs at entrances indicate that visitors should not enter if they are ill, have been exposed to someone with the virus or have recently traveled to a country where COVID-19 is prevalent.

Cieslewicz and his wife, Jordan, live in Stevens Point with their two dogs.

"When I am not at work, I enjoy the outdoors, which includes camping, hiking and fishing. Jordan and I also enjoy traveling and exploring new places," said Cieslewicz.

WBHS senior Lauren Bahr receives volunteer award

Lauren Bahr, a senior at Wittenberg-Birnamwood High School, has been honored for her exemplary volunteer service with a President's Volunteer Service Award.

The award, which recognizes Americans of all ages who have volunteered significant amounts of time to serve their communities and their country, was granted in February by The Prudential Spirit of Community Awards program.

To be considered for the award, Bahr logged in more than 100 hours of volunteer time in a year, through school and 4-H activities. At WBHS, Bahr is an active member of the National Honor Society and Charger Athletic Club. In the 4-H club she belongs to, some of the volunteer activities include caroling, distributing gift baskets to the elderly and providing Valentines for veterans. She also works as a camp counselor in the summer, which counts toward the hours needed as it is an unpaid position.

In its 25th year, the Prudential Spirit of Community Awards, sponsored by Prudential Financial in partnership with the National Association of Secondary School Principals, recognizes middle and high school students across America for outstanding volunteer service.

Lauren Bahr

CONTRIBUTED

"Across the United States, young volunteers are doing remarkable things to contribute to the well-being of the people and communities around them," said Charles Lowrey, Prudential chairman and CEO. "Prudential is honored to celebrate the contributions of these students, and we hope their stories inspire others to volunteer, too."

Bahr had applied for a scholarship through Prudential Financial, which she didn't receive, but she was happy to be recognized by the company with this award certificate for her hours of volunteer service.

Bahr will be swimming for Ripon College in August while pursuing a double major in psychology and education with a minor in coaching.

Social distancing already put into practice

Those who know me well know that I'm a hugger by nature, and family and friends look forward to a healthy embrace from me. I learned early on that some people don't like, need or want to be hugged, and you learn to leave them alone or simply greet them with a happy smile. I'm pretty good at reading body language, and it's important not to violate the personal space of those who cherish it.

With all the precautions we are now being encouraged to take to help ebb the tide of the coronavirus, one practice that is getting a lot of attention is social distancing — keeping yourself about six feet away from the next person in a public environment.

I got to practice this on the weekend when I attended a Bible camp annual meeting at a church in Appleton. The room was set up so we could all sit in chairs spaced about six feet apart, facing a large screen to watch a Powerpoint presentation. Normally we gather around tables, visit and have lunch together, but all that got pared back for this event. Nothing shortens a meeting like leaving no room or time to visit.

I've been social distancing before they even started calling it that. Although many people are just now understanding the concept, I can honestly say I've been embracing the practice for a long time. The sad part is that no one else has been following my lead.

Many is the time I have been pulling into a mostly empty parking lot, hoping to not have to be near others. It never ceases to amaze me that I can pull up into a spot and hope to cross over the line to the next parking spot so that I can pull out instead of back out — and someone will drive right into that spot. There can be no other cars on that side, but the person feels compelled to align the front of their car with mine. Apparently it brings some sense of order to their world while being a major source of irritation in mine.

Shopping in a supermarket brings along challenges as well. I can finally find the aisle I need to be in — only to find a fellow shopper with a cart parked indefinitely in front of the one product I need from that shelf. I'm perplexed at how much decision-making needs to go through that person's mind before moving on and leaving me clear passage to my desired product. The invention of the large shopping cart is no one's friend. Why do people think they are the only ones in the store? Why do they think they can park the cart in the middle of the aisle, blocking passage in both directions?

One thing I will never understand is restroom behavior. I can be in a restroom that has 10 or more stalls and pick the one farthest away from the door, sinks and areas of constant traffic flow — and someone will inevitably pick the stall right next to mine. Seriously, what possesses someone to do that? Is there some deep psychological need for that kind of closeness? Do people not understand the concept of what a bathroom can be used for, especially in a restaurant, after a large spicy meal?

I suppose this will be a year of great realizations. As a society, we will either teach ourselves to be aware of others, concerned for others and compassionate about the needs of others, or we will learn nothing about the graciousness of social distancing and go back to our bad behaviors and selfishly muddle on through life.

Hope springs eternal, and I do so want to believe that people will finally take notice of the rest of us inhabiting this planet. I'm hopeful people will change their selfish ways, but I'm not putting any money on it.
