

The Shawano County ATV/UTV Riders are asking the Shawano County Board of Supervisors to open a northern segment of the Wiouwash State Trail for use by ATV and UTV operators. The part of the trail in question stretches from Wittenberg south to County Road SS in Split Rock. Businesses in Birnamwood, Wittenberg, Split Rock and Tigerton would benefit from the expansion, supervisors were told.

Speed limit increased for ATVs, UTVs in Shawano County

County board asked to open northern segment of Wiouwash State Trail

By KEVIN PASSON
Editor-in-chief

Drivers of ATVs and UTVs now have the option of going faster on county highways, thanks to change in the law approved by the Shawano County Board of Supervisors in January.

The machines can now be driven at the posted highway speed instead of a maximum of 35 miles per hour, as was the case previously.

Supervisor Kevin Conradt said speed limits in the original ATV/UTV ordinance were in accordance with state law at the time, but now the state law has changed to posted limits.

Supervisor Jim Przybylski expressed concern over the lack of safety features on ATVs/UTVs compared to cars and trucks.

“Automotives have safety equipment — airbags, anti-lock brakes, anti-skid control, mirrors and signal lights — as standard equipment,” he said. “ATVs and UTVs don’t.”

He also said adjoining counties have a speed limit of 35 mph indicated on their websites.

He noted that the state has recorded 11 deaths from 92 ATV crashes on public roads.

Highway Commissioner Grant Bystol said drivers of UTVs, particularly those machines with unlocked rear differential, have requested to go faster, up to the 45 or 55 mph speed limit. He said safety issues arise when the UTVs are equipped to go faster but hold up traffic when they are required to driver slower than the rest of the vehicles on the roads.

Supervisor Mike Stupecky said that, as an avid UTV user, he feels safer traveling at the posted speed limit with the other vehicles on the road.

“As someone that rides a UTV quite a bit, I feel much safer in my UTV for not only myself but for vehicles around me if I’m going the posted speed limit,” Stupecky said. “If I’m going 35 in a 55, I am backing traffic up, and they’re going to want to pass me. It’s just common sense. I’d be totally for passing this. I think it’s safer for everyone on the roads.”

Other laws governing ATVs and UTVs on public roads are still in effect.

They must still be operated on the extreme right side of the roadway on the paved surface. All operators shall ride in single file.

Operators are required to have head-lamps (white light) and tail-lamps (red light) turned on at all times. However, no off-road auxiliary lighting on ATVs or UTVs shall be used on county segments approved for ATV/UTV use.

No person younger than 12 can legally operate an ATV or UTV under any circumstances. All operators who were born after Jan. 1, 1988, and are over the age of 12 are required to complete an approved ATV/UTV Safety Course, and carry the safety certificate with them while riding on public lands.

All operators and passengers younger than 18 shall wear a helmet approved by the Wisconsin Department of Transportation.

New trial date set in overdose homicide case

Stephany French scheduled to stand trial in June

By WARREN BLUHM
News Editor

A new trial date has been scheduled for a Green Bay woman accused of supplying the drugs that led to the 2021 death of a man who died at Mohican North Star Casino Resort in the Town of Bartelme.

Stephany L. French, 29, is charged with first-degree reckless homicide by delivering drugs, theft from a corpse and a misdemeanor charge of failure to aid a victim or report a crime. A December jury trial had been canceled in November while prosecution and defense attorneys discussed the prosecution’s latest offer for a plea agreement.

During a status conference in the case Jan. 30, Shawano-Menominee County Judge Katherine Sloma asked defense attorney Eric Steven Maciolek whether a plea deal had been reached, but Maciolek asked that the trial be placed back on the calendar.

The victim’s uncle made a statement on behalf of the family, asking that an effort be made to speed up the process.

“It’s a matter of concern for all the family members that are involved,” he said. “We have a total of about 35 of our siblings and our children and grandchildren, and it’s affecting all of them quite a bit. Yes, I know that in court proceedings there are rights, but also as a victim, too, we have rights.”

Sloma agreed with the uncle, noting that the charges were filed against French almost exactly two years ago, on Feb. 1, 2022.

“I don’t like for a case to last this long, and I wish they could come to closure sooner one way or another,” Sloma said. “Apparently it’s going back on the trial calendar, I was optimistic that it wouldn’t be going that way, but unfortunately we will reset it. I’ll try and put it on sooner rather than later.”

After reviewing the court calendar for coming months, the judge was able to schedule a four-day trial starting June 4, with a final pre-trial conference set for May 16.

District Attorney Gregory Parker added a comment to Maciolek that the plea offer is revoked.

“We’re not screwing around with this again,” Parker said.

Schmidt bills address meat, dairy labeling

Assemblyman says cellular-based meats, plant-based liquids not facing scrutiny

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

Food that's not raised on a farm doesn't face as much regulation as the products farmers produce, according to Rep. Peter Schmidt, and he has a couple of bills circulating through the Wisconsin Legislature that could even the playing field. Assembly Bill 555 would require meat created with lab-grown animal cells to be labeled as such. Schmidt, R-Bonduel, noted that he's heard reports of restaurants running out of farm-grown meats and turning to lab meats as a substitute. "This bill defines an animal as a mammal, bird, reptile, amphibian or mollusk," Schmidt said. "Words over time get changed, and they're getting misused in our food products." The measure has become law in other states, according to Schmidt, as a precautionary measure because lab-grown food is a new industry with little scientific research on how such food impacts humans. Fines for violations range from $100 to $500, and could also result in spending up to 90 days in jail, something Schmidt said came from the state's old margarine ban, which was lifted in 1967. "This bill mirrors those same penalties as margarine," he said. Schmidt, a farmer himself, is subject to regulations for the animals he raises, but laboratories do not face that kind of scrutiny, he said. Farmers are required to pay $1 per head into programs like the beef checkoff, established under the 1985 Farm Bill for the animals they raise, and he considers it unfair that labs aren't paying their fair share. "Everyone's saying that cellular meat is greener for the environment than raising livestock or other animals for meat, and to me, there's not enough regulation on cell production compared to what is there for animal husbandry," Schmidt said. "Every few years, the feds update statutes and guidance for livestock and animal agriculture. The lab-grown cells are mostly in the research and development phase, so they don't have many regulations to ensure safe products." There are 22 agriculture commodity checkoff programs, Schmidt added, and there shouldn't be difference between the regulations farmers face and the ones scientists face. He noted those checkoff programs started as voluntary but became mandatory over the years. "They (scientists) advertise meat products, and they get the actual benefit of using that name of meat,"

Schmidt said. "There's no federal program where cellular-based meats pay in." The second food-based bill Schmidt is working on addresses milk, specifically plant-based liquids being touted as milk such as almond milk and oat milk. Assembly Bill 952 forbids labeling a product as milk unless it comes from an animal. "Plant-based beverages took off instead of the laboratory, cellular-based milk products," Schmidt said. He noted that he uses a device that produces plant-based beverages in his office, but he takes exceptions as a farmer to the products being labeled milk. With plant-based liquids, the nuts and grains have to be crushed, and Schmidt's concerned that, over time, the term milking might be synonymous with crushing and give people the impression that farmers crush animals in some fashion to produce the milk. "You can't really milk a plant," Schmidt said. "You've got to crush them in a blender to make it. That's another reason why we need food-labeling bills to maintain the historical and customs of certain languages. The word 'milk' has been around for centuries and has been referred to mammals." AB 555 has gone through a hearing in the Assembly's agriculture committee, while AB 952 is currently making the rounds in the state Senate.

County uses ARPA funds for vehicle replacement

$1.5 million yet to be allocated by year's end

By KEVIN PASSON
Editor-in-chief

The vehicle replacement fund for Shawano County vehicles — with the exception of the highway and human services departments — is now stocked with $1.1 million.

The Shawano County Executive Committee agreed Jan. 17 to use money from the American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) fund. Shawano County Board Chairman Tom Kautza announced the decision at the Jan. 24 meeting of the Shawano County Board. "The replacement fund is now complete for the sheriff's department, and for all other, not highway and not DHS, but all other county departments that have any vehicles or access to vehicles, and even puts in lawnmowers," Kautza said.

Vehicles used by the Shawano County Sheriff's Department, like the one here used by a deputy to respond to a fire call in Bowler late last year, are among those that will be eventually replaced with the use of American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) funds obtained by the county. Officials agreed to set aside $1.1 million for the vehicle replacement fund that will affect all departments except the highway department and the Department of Human Services.

The highway and human services departments have other means to replace their vehicles, which is why they are not part of this plan, he explained. "These were things before that they (department heads) would put forward like to CIP (capital improvement program) for a lawnmower replacement, a snowblower, things like that, to where this way it's all in one budget, and you're planning ahead for that instead of just waiting," Kautza said. The chairman said the county still has about $1.5 million remaining in ARPA funds. Jim Davel, county administrative coordinator, said the county must allocate the funds before the end of 2024.

The Legislative Fiscal Bureau reports the county received $7,944,151 in ARPA funds. Kautza said the county previously used the funds to finance emergency repairs and equipment replacement. Kautza also reported the committee approved plans for a new roof and additional insulation for the Crawford Center, the contract is not to exceed $400,000. The Shawano County Public Property Committee endorsed a base bid of $243,000 from Mathena Roofing and Sheetmetal. The executive committee discussed and debated two alternate projects for another $130,000. The first alternate project was the removal and replacement of gutters and downspouts. Second was an additional 4 inches of insulation on the roof. "We're going to continue to work the hockey club volunteer to put some effort forward to help try and make that a more profitable venue, so the county isn't just throwing money into a money pit," Kautza said. Finally, a new committee is being formed by the human services department. It will also involve the sheriff's department and the county drug court. The Shawano County Criminal Justice Coordinating Council (CJCC) will bring stakeholders in the criminal justice system and members of the public together to discuss issues affecting the system, resolve problems and plan for the future. The CJCC will act in an advisory capacity on issues affecting the criminal justice system. "Basically, they're going to have a committee to try and coordinate all that between everybody, but that committee doesn't have any authority to do anything," Kautza said. "That sounds like typical government, but if we're going to continue to get the funding for drug court, we have to form that committee." Among the functions of the CJCC will be to make suggestions for more efficient use of resources, provide ongoing oversight for new or alternative programs and continue the work of the jail alternatives ad hoc study committee, including refining and monitoring its recommendations for alternatives to incarceration that may help in reducing the average daily population at the jail.

Student strip search bill passes Wisconsin legislature

By NEW MEDIA STAFF

A bill that prohibits strip searches of students conducted by school personnel is on its way to the governor's desk for his signature. State Rep. David Steffen, R-Howard, and state Sen. Eric Wimberger, R-Green Bay, introduced Senate Bill 111 in response to an incident at the Suring

School District involving six teenage girls being ordered to strip down to their underwear by then-superintendent Kelly Casper. The search was allegedly conducted to find a nicotine vape pen. All four state lawmakers serving Oconto County signed on as sponsors to the bill, including Wimberger, state Sen. Mary Felzkowski, R-Tomahawk, state Rep. Jeffrey Mursau, R-Crivitz, and state Rep. Elijah Behnke, R-Oconto. Under current law, strip searching a student is a Class B misdemeanor. However, Wisconsin's definition of "strip search" is a search that would expose a student's private areas. Because of this limited definition, prosecutors decided Casper could not be charged with this offense. The new bill extends the definition of "strip search" to include searches that would require a student to strip down to their underwear, making this a chargeable offense moving forward. "The incident that occurred at Suring revealed a statutory loophole that needs to be closed in order to protect our students from such humiliating and intrusive searches," Steffen said. "We expect that our kids are being treated with dignity and basic privacy when at school — this bill helps to ensure that." The bill does not affect existing laws regarding strip searches by law enforcement.

Casper was charged in February 2022 with false imprisonment, but a Brown County judge ruled the alleged facts in the case did not fit that charge, either. The Suring School Board suspended Casper with pay shortly after charges were filed, and it eventually approved a resignation/separation agreement with Casper.

Fairgrounds operate at deficit for 2023

County fair still turns profit of $178K with 60,000 attending

By KEVIN PASSON
Editor-in-chief

Hot and humid weather for a few days during the 2023 Shawano County Fair affected overall operating revenue, but the fair still turned a profit of about $178,000.

Scott Breitrack, president of the Shawano Area Agricultural Society Inc., which runs the county fairgrounds, presented the society's annual report to the Shawano County Board of Supervisors on Jan. 24.

"You know it was kind of hot at the fair," he said. "We lost two days of good fair weather. It didn't have to be 100 degrees."

Operating revenue for the fair totaled $557,401 for 2023, down about $12,000 from 2022. Expenses were at $379,039, just over $27,000 more than 2022.

On the Saturday of the fair, held over Labor Day weekend, a transformer between the pig and beef barns blew. Within two hours, it was fixed and running again.

"We know we got a lot of slack from people, 'Animals died! Animals died!'" Breitrack said. "There's no animal that died there. If anybody ever told you that, they're lying."

Due to the heat, organizers sprayed water on the roof of the rabbit barn, but Breitrack said it was not effective. He said they sprayed the roof for more than an hour and only saw a 5-degree drop in temperature. As soon as spraying stopped, the temperature rose again.

Some rabbits, chickens and other small animals were allowed to be taken home early to prevent any deaths.

"We did have about 60,000 people at the fair," Breitrack said. "That's still is pretty good for two days that wasn't real good."

He also noted the new 84-foot tall vertical ride went over well.

Organizers are searching for new entertainment on Labor Day.

"The demos are going back to one day instead of two days," Breitrack said. "We're looking for something to do on Monday, so if somebody has a suggestion, we're willing to listen."

He also highlighted the new bingo building and horse barn for the 2023 fair that featured nearly $500,000 in equipment and building expenses. Updated electrical service for campers in the northeast area of the fairgrounds was completed, and the fence along Fairview Way was straightened.

A new cooler for the food stand was purchased, and an ice cream machine, with costs reimbursed by the Farm Bureau, was purchased.

"The first night, we did $700 worth of ice cream out of there," Breitrack said. "That was really good."

As for the Shawano Speedway, races were held 21 nights with six nights rained out.

The raceway generated $564,636 in operating revenue while incurring $597,273 in expenses.

Auto Select is a sponsor for the 2024 race season. The company agreed to a $4,000 sponsorship for each of the next 10 years.

Building and ground rentals brought in $84,619, about $28,000 less than the year before. Expenses increased about $1,000 to $20,287.

Including general operating expenses, the financial report showed a deficit of $108,360 in net assets from operations. However, net assets at the end of the fiscal year (Oct. 31) totaled $863,229.

Task force begins focusing on broadband connections

Tigerton, Navarino, Bonduel areas top spots for future projects

By KEVIN PASSON
Editor-in-chief

Members of the Shawano County Broadband Task Force continue to strategize on how best to cover as many homes in the county as possible with high-speed internet service.

At a Jan. 18 meeting, they specifically discussed Tigerton, Navarino and the area northeast of Bonduel.

"Tigerton is like low-hanging fruit," said Peter Thillman, chief economic development officer with Shawano County Economic Progress Inc., referring to the many homes there that are unserved or underserved and, therefore, ripe to be the recipient of grant money to extend broadband there. "Navarino is a big problem. Northeast of Bonduel is pretty bad, too."

Matt Hietpas, director of technology services for the county, reminded the task force members that Wisconsin will get more than $1 billion in funds to expand broadband. Criteria and a timeline for the latest round of grants have yet to be determined. Every point will count when deciding who does and does not get a grant.

"Right here's the key," Hietpas said. "There's 12 points available that is completely contingent upon community support and local and tribal coordination."

So, if a company comes in just trying to hit as many places as possible without coordination from local authorities, they'll miss out on those points, and possibly the grant itself, he said.

"They are willing to allow from middle mile infrastructure if there's long distances between these points," Hietpas added, in reference to the Wisconsin Public Service Commission, which will determine who gets grants.

Applications that tie in schools, health care needs, public safety and housing units will have an advantage.

"Any fiber to the farm is still important," said Jim Davel, county administrative coordinator. "Talking about schools now, we have virtual days now. My kids can't get on a virtual day."

Rhonda Strebel mentioned that the additional services would be beneficial for the health care system, either as nurses try to access health records during home visits or patients using telehealth services.

"The problem was always access and really understanding broadband," Davel said. "You see it in your health care. If you can't get on through broadband, that's where you bite the bullet and say, just like we did with electricity after World War II, and they went and ran electricity. It's gotta be that level of dedication to the world community to get that up to speed."

Thillman urged members to think about access first and affordability second.

Internet providers and working with neighboring counties on continuous service were also discussed.

"Cirrinity's a big player on the west side, and on the east side, we have Nsight, Spectrum, and Frontier's kind of peppered all over the place," Hietpas said.

Results of an application for another project are expected in about two months. Shawano County is working with Cirrinity on the project.

This work would link Cirrinity's fiber optic connection in Marion to the Stockbridge-Munsee community near the Town of Red Springs. It would focus on about 300 homes.

"We're really focusing on houses, houses, houses and businesses," Hietpas said. "They don't want to see middle miles (without a connection)."

Public safety 911 towers are part of the project, which will likely increase the chances of getting a grant.

"We're going to link up all of our 911 towers on the west end of the county, and that is hopefully going to get us a lot of points and support from the Public Service Commission of Wisconsin to push this project," Hietpas said.

There are six towers on the west side of the county.

Hietpas and SCEPI will continue to actively look for more grant opportunities.

According to the criminal complaint, the man's body was found Sept. 3, 2021, by a housekeeper at the hotel. An autopsy listed the cause of death as fentanyl, methamphetamine and ethanol toxicity.

Shawano County sheriff's deputies found a white powdery residue on the nightstand next to the bed, but no drugs or drug paraphernalia were located in the room, the complaint said.

Hotel registration showed that a Lynn French was listed as the man's guest. After searching his vehicle, authorities found paperwork for the owner of the car.

When contacted, the car owner stated that the victim was with his cousin, Stephany French, and alleged that she had a $400 a day heroin habit, the complaint said. The victim's family stated that the victim liked to drink alcohol but was not a drug user.

According to the complaint, French at first denied being in the room, but when confronted with video surveillance photos, she said she didn't know what happened to the man but tried to revive him by pouring cold water on him.

In another ATV-related issue, Don Aanonsen, of Eland, representing the Shawano County ATV/UTV Riders, asked the board about opening a northern segment of the Wiouwash State Trail. The club is following the four-step process outlined by the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources, with the final step being to work with the County Highway & Parks Committee and request to add ATV/UTV users to the county's master plan. "The final step was to talk with the county parks and recreation committee and request a resolution to be drafted to allow ATV/UTV users to the master plan," Aanonsen said. When the original master plan was created more than 30 years ago, ATVs were not commonly used and UTVs had yet to built, he said. "This request would certainly add more tourism to the western part of Shawano County," Aanonsen said, pointing to economic benefits to businesses in communities like Tomahawk, Elcho and Crandon. Businesses in Birnamwood, Wittenberg, Split Rock and Tigerton would benefit from the expansion. The part of the trail in question stretches from Wittenberg south to County Road SS in Split Rock. It includes a few stretches where riders must use the highway due to private land. "The trail is very, very beautiful. It is not used very much," he said. "It would be nice if we could use it." He said tentative plans have already been adopted for its use, and they include operating on the trail only in daylight hours, a 25 mph speed limit, and using it between May 1 and Oct. 31. "This shouldn't be one big brainstorm. It should be rather simple to do," Supervisor Jerry Erdmann said. "This would definitely be a benefit to the western end of the county." Town Chairman Tom Kautza noted DNR approval was also needed.

However, DNR officials are awaiting the outcome of some pending court cases that will set a precedent before taking action on applications like this. The Wiouwash State Trail name is derived from the first two letters of the four counties it traverses: Winnebago, Outagamie, Waupaca and Shawano. The trail is used by walkers, hikers, bikers, horseback riders and snowmobilers during the winter months. Two sections of the trail are complete: 24 miles from Aniwa south to Split Rock and 21 miles from Hortonville south to Oshkosh. Parking is available in the communities of Birnamwood, Eland, Wittenberg and Tigerton. U.S. Highway 45 runs through or parallel to these four communities in Shawano County. In Eland, the Wiouwash State Trail connects with the Mountain-Bay State Trail. The Mountain-Bay State Trail runs between Wausau and Green Bay.

Cause of water damage at library detected

Repair costs may not be significant as previously expected

By KEVIN PASSON
Editor-in-chief

Repairs to water leaks and building at the Shawano Public Library aren't expected to be as expensive as thought just a month ago. Highway Commissioner Grant Bystol and crew members investigated the issues prominent in the northeast corner of the building and have most of the repairs already completed.

Supervisor Tom Kautza explained the situation to the Shawano County Public Property Committee on Feb. 1. He said a piece of Spancrete (pre-cast concrete) is sitting atop a poured wall with no sealant in between. "Everything on the outside is higher than the wall," Kautza said. "When they (previous builders) set the floor deck on, they never put nothing in between here to seal it. "And the water will get higher outside than the wall, so it would just run in between the floor and the poured wall on top, and you can see the brown lines coming down the wall."

Steve Dreher, maintenance director, noted another significant issue. "They also had an abandoned — it looked like a duct at one time — that when they did one of their expansions, they put sheet metal over that," he said. "And the sheet metal had rotted away, and sand's just falling in."

Jim Davel, county administrative coordinator, noted there was no mold on the drywall but said the carpet is a different story. "If you take that carpet up, you'll probably find some under there," Kautza added.

This phase of the repairs was projected to cost about $11,500. In the conference room in the northeast corner of the building, this included removal of the interior insulation, drywall, and the tongue and groove, as well as identifying cracks and filling them.

The plan was to then wait until later in the spring to attack the exterior problems, which would include regrading the land around the building and other work to the foundation. Those costs were first estimated to be around $130,000.

Davel again urged waiting several weeks before starting the next phase.

"I would recommend that when Grant finishes that you have another joint meeting (with the library board), because I think your overall cost is going to be nowhere near that estimate that Grant had done," he said. "And I really think that instead of going right away and say, 'Hey, we're going to put that room back together,' let's wait a little bit until spring and see what it looks like."

Kautza said the biggest exterior problem is the grading around the building and the water runoff from adjacent properties.

"On that north side, if they make a little bit of a dish in there — a couple feet deep — and then put down some fabric and some clean, crushed stone and put drain tile in there, there's a catch basin on the north side, and that catch basin needs some work on it," he said. "We fix it so the water gets out away from the building and gets over to the catch basins. Right now, it's flat. I think that would fix the building, period, for the 100 years."

Just six months ago, some officials were talking about closing the building due to the water damages, foundation issues and mold, and constructing a new library for $13 million or more. There was also talk of housing the library on the first floor of new government center that would include county offices on the second floor, in a joint effort to replace the library and courthouse.

According to the library's website, the building at 128 S. Sawyer St., was completed in 1960. A major remodeling and addition was completed in 1990. Square footage went from just under 12,000 to more than 21,000.

Matchmaker's comical meddling hits SCHS

'Hello, Dolly!' provides hilarious romp into helping people find their forever love

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

Today, people use a variety of methods to look for a mate, including advice from friends and dating apps.

Back at the turn of the 20th century, seekers of love sometimes turned to matchmakers like Dolly Gallagher Levi.

Audiences will be able to see that story come to life as Shawano Community High School's theater program presents the musical "Hello, Dolly!" just in time for the weekend before Valentine's Day. The show follows Dolly as she travels to Yonkers, New York, to help the miserly Horace Vandergelder, described as an unmarried half-a-millionaire.

Dolly helps prospective lovers to find each other in a variety of ways, whether it be dance instruction or mandolin lessons. However, she meets her match with trying to help Horace, who tries to put the kibosh on his niece's forever after when she wants to marry an artist, a vocation that Horace feels does not guarantee a consistent cash flow needed to live on. What makes things even harder is that Dolly ultimately wants to be Horace's betrothed herself.

It's been a while since SCHS has done a period piece for a musical, with "The Sound of Music" in 2018, according to co-director Alex Konen. Working with Matthew Pfantz, the pair decided to bring the good old days back again.

"Hello, Dolly!" is a comedy that's ultimately meant to exemplify the challenges we might face when we're looking at the idea of love or the growth we have to go through as we get older with the concept of love," Konen said. "Both Dolly and Horace have been madly in love in the past, and what happened in their lives has shifted what they want, but it's comical in nature."

Among the comical pieces in the musical is when Horace's store clerks, Cornelius and Barnaby, decide to get out of Yonkers for a time and seek their own adventures in love and excitement, Konen added.

Pfantz feels that even though the musical is deemed a comedy, there is a serious side, as well.

"At its heart, 'Hello, Dolly!' is a comedy, an exaggerated portrayal of the difficulties surrounding love," Pfantz said. "In this show you see characters falling in love, for both good and bad reasons, characters falling out of love, and characters redefining their perceptions of love. However, this show is not only a comedy. There are moments of true emotional nuance within this show as well."

With a lengthy period since the last period piece, Konen said he and Pfantz wanted to give the high school students that exposure again, as many of them had not performed in something historical, unless they served as the children in "The Sound of Music."

"I think, as the costumes come on, they get more and more into character," Konen said. "It's just been a process of getting everything lined up here. I think they were hesitant at first, because many of them had not heard of the musical, but as they've gotten familiar with the script, gotten familiar with the characters, they've had a lot of fun."

Konen and Pfantz have conversed and noted that, even if they come into the rehearsals downtrodden from the day's events, they leave with smiles on their faces.

"Amid the perfectly timed puns and situational humor, the actors are required to convince the audience of their loneliness, their fear and their anguish," Pfantz said. "Students are expected to perform in many acting styles including, comedic, dramatic, slapstick and absurdist all while weaving a coherent plot. This is no small task, and the students are rising to the

Overheard conversations in a clinic's waiting room

Due to my husband's recent medical testing, I've put in some long hours in clinic and hospital waiting rooms. I usually spend this time on my smartphone, but lately I've been trying to get away from the tiny screen to take a more global view of what's happening around me.

Truth be told, I've always been a people-watcher. Observing humans behaving in various settings is downright fascinating, and watching makes waiting far less tedious. When my children were young, we made a game of it, surreptitiously choosing a "subject" and guessing their occupation. That made for some highly entertaining moments as my kids shared their vivid imaginings until we all got the giggles. Luckily, not one of the "chosen" ever seemed to catch on to what was happening.

Now that I've rediscovered this amusement, I've found that observing others is not just a good way to pass the time. It's a path to greater appreciation for those in the working world, particularly the helping professions. Case in point. Jon recently went in for some tests at Bellin in Green Bay. I plunked myself down in the best chair available in the waiting room. I was scrolling through my email when two men, whom my mother would have politely called heavy set, struck up a conversation. Fortunately, I was sitting at an angle where I could see them without drawing their attention.

One was wearing a coordinated hat and T-shirt espousing his political views.

The other was dressed in camouflage, sucking on a toothpick which he alternately used to clean his fingernails. As so often happens in waiting rooms, the men bonded quickly, sharing personal information, including that were both in their 70s. They also had in common noticeable hearing loss and some serious health issues, including diabetes and coronary heart disease.

Suddenly, one pointed angrily at the television mounted on the wall. I couldn't tell what set him off because the TV was set on mute. As he read the subtitles aloud, they both grew increasingly animated, expressing fierce disapproval of the younger generation. They're rude, lazy, shiftless, selfish, spoiled — blah, blah, blah. Like my other wait-mates, I concentrated on my phone so they wouldn't notice I was eavesdropping, although I doubted they cared.

What surprised me was that I found myself getting defensive. I've always been partial to young people, having been one myself long ago and spending my entire teaching career trying to nudge them toward self-sufficiency. Quite honestly, I still enjoy hanging out with young people. I like to say I'm 77 going on 17, a comment that always draws a chuckle.

When that subject was exhausted, they moved on to Social Security benefits, Medicare co-pays and the new cap on insulin prices. I had a number of comments to offer but thought it best to keep them to myself. My reasoning is that, when in tight quarters with strangers expressing strong opinions with which I might disagree, discretion is definitely the better part of valor. I wisely bit my tongue but couldn't help thinking of things I would say if I could.

What I chiefly wanted to share was that we seniors might want to cut the people who are or will be providing for us in our declining years a little slack. These men would correctly point out that they paid into the system all their working lives. Due to advances in modern medicine, we have made huge strides in prevention and treatment of chronic diseases such as those these men are dealing with. This means most of us are living longer and probably get more out than we put in, even if you figure in inflation and the interest we might have earned on our forced savings investment.

I also wanted to urge them to look around at the people employed there, all working to provide the best possible care to help people like them live better longer. In my experience, these unsung heroes work faithfully to meet the mission, despite the fact that many patients make it harder for them to succeed by not taking care of themselves as they should in order to live a healthier life without needing medical intervention.

I would finish by saying I never cease to marvel at health care professionals who listen sympathetically all day long to the laments of the sick. They surely leave work mentally drained and bone-tired but must put on a happy face and head home to work a second shift caring for their families. They are often young, primarily female. Most have small children that they trust to the care of others so they can care for strangers. Am I the only one who thinks they warrant less griping and more gratitude, not to mention a generous pay raise?

occasion. They make me proud each and every day.”

That’s not to say that there haven’t been challenges with the show, though.

“The singing requirements, and then there’s the dance ballet in these older shows,” Konen said. “I think we do the best we can. We have some students who have taken zero years of dance that go out and learn as much as they can, and then sometimes we have some students who have done years of dance.”

Konen said he’s heard of schools that have the dance numbers done by students in professional dance schools, and even though there are a couple of those schools in Shawano, he thinks the high school students get more by learning the moves themselves.

“We pull from our own ensemble,” Konen said. “I believe we have been fortunate to find choreographers who meet our students at their skill level and push them to grow as students. I don’t know how we stack up against other schools, but I do know our students internalize the choreography and enjoy it.”

“I hope they take away the concept of this idea that love is going to shift and grow, and that we’re going to develop as people,” Konen said when describing the message he wants audiences to get. “Just the simple growth and arc our characters go through, and the shift that Horace makes from ‘I want a wife who is basically going to be a housekeeper’ to ‘I want a wife that actually cares about me and makes my life interesting and adventurous.’”

Bad habits dealt with in 'Sister Act' musical

Show looks at people's differences and makes them hilarious

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

Folks going to the Ripley Performing Arts Center at Pulaski High School this weekend better say their prayers before sitting down as students bring "Sister Act" to life.

The popular film has been turned into a musical, and singing nuns will be popping up throughout the show, which runs for the next two weekends at the high school, 1040 S. St. Augustine St., Pulaski. The musical debuted in October 2006 in Pasadena, California, and has continued through Broadway and the West End in London, but now the students of PHS have the chance to turn nuns and religion into a laughing matter.

The show follows nightclub singer Deloris Van Cartier as she discovers that plans to talk to a record producer were fabricated. When she goes to confront her gangster boyfriend about the matter, she witnesses him shooting a suspected squealer and makes a beeline for the police station. The desk chief is an old friend from high school, and he decides that there's only one place where Deloris can hide until it's time to testify in court — the Holy Order of the Little Sisters of Our Mother of Perpetual Faith.

Putting a free-spirited woman in a place where order reigns supreme pits Deloris against the stern Mother Superior. After some initial difficulties figuring out a way for Deloris to fit in with the nuns, Mother Superior decides she'll do best as the new choir director. However, it doesn't take Deloris long to turn the traditional choir into something a little more hip that soon attracts a lot of attention — unwanted attention — to the church, putting Deloris in danger.

Director Amy Tubbs said "Sister Act" seemed like the perfect show for PHS to do this year because it allowed the school to tap into a large trove of talented female singers to bring the show alive. All told, there are about 85 students involved with the show from the cast to the orchestra pit to the stage crew.

Deloris Van Cartier, played by Marilyn Koehler, left, is horrified to learn that the witness protection program she's in requires her to don a nun's habit and curb her loud and boisterous ways, as Mother Superior, played by Maddi Wirtz, lays down the law in a scene from the first act of "Sister Act."

"We have a lot of girls who can sing really well," Tubbs said. "It just seemed like the right year to feature them, but we're not leaving the guys out. There are some awesome roles for the guys, and they still get to sing and dance and be featured, too, but we really had a lot of strong singer girls."

There are two versions of the musical, according to Tubbs, with one version designed for schools that don't have a person of color to play the lead, like Pulaski.

"As we didn't have a Deloris of color, we're using that version so that everything's culturally appropriate," Tubbs said. "We're being sensitive, and the licensing company tells you what lines to change and what's appropriate for a white performer. We don't have a Whoopi Goldberg (who starred in the films). Some of the lines don't make sense if you don't have a person of color performing."

Tubbs likes the musical's message about having people from different backgrounds coming together and learning to appreciate what makes them different, as well as what makes them the same.

"They both have something to offer the other, and I think that's an important message for today," Tubbs said. "People can still work together and become friends. That's important."

With a lot of music and choreography required to bring the show together, PHS has tapped its choir and band to help make the show happen, according to Tubbs. She noted that many of those students were part of the group that performed at the Tournament of Roses Parade on New Year's Day in Pasadena, California, so getting them back into the swing of things in Wisconsin was a challenge at first.

"It wasn't a major challenge, certainly, but they did miss some rehearsal time," Tubbs said.

Conservation easement to bring recreation mecca

The largest conservation easement in Wisconsin history will bring a 67,000-acre timber and wetlands playground for the state's ATV riders, hunters, anglers, trappers, hikers and other recreational users.

The Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources finalized the conservation easement purchase of the Pelican Acre Forest on Jan. 26 from the Virginia-based Conservation Fund, the property's current owner, said Jim Lemke, the DNR's real estate section manager.

Centered around the tiny unincorporated town of Monico in Oneida County at the intersection of highways 45 and 8, the forest gem was one of the last remaining tracts of continuous forest in the state, Lemke said.

While the total $15.3 million purchase — including a previous purchase in April 2022 of 12,419 acres for $4.6 million — permanently protects and gives public access to the land, it will also allow timber harvesting there to continue and the land to remain on tax rolls, he noted. The remaining 54,898-acre easement finalized Jan. 26 for $10.7 million brings the total protected site to 67,317 acres.

Clint Miller, central Midwest director of the conservation fund, a major player in the land protection coup, called it "public land benefits without the burden of public ownership."

Most of the land is in Oneida County, with about 1,000 acres in Langlade County and 600 in Forest County.

Roughly 10 miles by six miles, the vast forest includes 58 miles of rivers and streams and 20,000 acres of wetlands, Lemke said.

Among the Pelican River Forest's impacts on sportsmen and sports-women are:

- Opening 70 miles of gravel and dirt logging roads to all vehicles starting June 1, giving access for hunters, hikers and other users. Previous owner The Forestland Group only allowed those roads to be open during the gun deer season, Miller noted. Under the agreement, the DNR will maintain those roads under the supervision of Ron Gropp of the DNR Forestry Division. Interest from a $1.5 million community foundation set up by the Conservation Fund at a Wausau bank will pay for future road maintenance when the property is sold in the future, probably to a timber interest, Miller said.

- Development of at least seven miles of ATV/UTV and snowmobile trails on the property. This will also link existing trails from Forest and Langlade counties. "They don't have a north-south route," Lemke said.

- Virtually any activity typically allowed on many public lands — hiking, foraging, hunting, fishing, trapping, kayaking — will be legal there immediately, Lemke noted. Because the roads are not paved, and currently not open, much of the land may be difficult to access right now.

Signage detailing the various activities offered will be installed in the coming months, Lemke said. The property will be added to the DNR website's public access land maps in a few months, too.

Lemke described the land as "industrial recreational forest land," noting it's been used for logging over the past 50-60 years. That will continue, as the parcel remains in the state's MFL (Managed Forest Law) program, which gives property owners significant tax breaks in return for granting public access.

Despite some misunderstandings with a few legislators and the general public, the new owner (likely a timber interest) will continue to pay taxes on the property at the MFL rate, Miller noted.

"The easement has zero effect on taxes," Miller said.

The current annual property tax payment is about $73,000. It prevents splintering and development of one of the state's last remaining continuous forests.

Although the DNR has been eyeing the property since 2018, the state legislature put the brakes on the easement purchase in April when the Joint Finance Committee balked on spending $4 million from the state's Knowles-Nelson Stewardship Program, despite the DNR's Natural Resources Board approval.

Clint and Patty Miller and their dog, Zeke, hike the trails of the Pelican River Forest.

JAY BRITTAIN

A few Republican legislators cited some local opposition to the plan and restrictions on private development.

The Conservation Fund accepted a $10.7 million offer, over $3 million less than originally requested, Lemke said. Most of the purchase was funded through the federal Forest Legacy Program, administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Land and Water Conservation Fund, which is derived from offshore gas and oil leases, not taxpayer dollars, Miller explained.

"You always have to compromise with projects like this," Miller said. "The public doesn't get everything they want. Conservation has never been a partisan issue."

Businesses like Mountain Springs Motel in Mountain likely will see a boost in business. Owner Bob Lepkowski, who also happens to be president of the 400-member Dusty Trails ATV Club in Oconto County, said he was excited to hear about the project.

"That would be very appealing," he said. "That's an advantage to these riders."

His club helps maintain about 100 miles of trails from Suring to Townsend, and he said many members would likely use trails on the Pelican River Forest.

The Pelican River Forest includes the headwaters of the Wolf River, and protection of the land and water will support clean water and air on a large scale, he added. The project had "100% tribal support" from the area's Indian tribes as well, he said.

Indigenous voices hold key to rediscovering culture

According to Dr. Carol Cornelius, the Oneida word Ongwehoweh translates to “The Real People — Most Indigenous nations have a word that describes them as the original, the Indigenous people of the land.”

It’s those original people who inspired Cornelius to write her latest book, “A History of Wisconsin Indigenous Voices: Menominee, Ho-Chunk, Oneida, Stockbridge, and Brothertown Interactions in the Removal Era.” She will discuss the text and the 1800s treaty era it covers during her Feb. 20 book event at the College of Menominee Nation’s Green Bay/Oneida campus.

For decades, Cornelius has been recognized as a revered Indigenous scholar. The Oneida/Stockbridge-Munsee educator earned her Ph.D. in 1992 and her resume includes helping to build the First Nations Studies undergraduate program at the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay, serving as the administrator for the Oneida Nation’s cultural heritage Department, and teaching for both UW-Green Bay and CMN. Cornelius currently serves as the Oral Scholar in Residence at UW-Green Bay.

Cornelius has two previous books to her credit, having authored “Iroquois Corn In a Culture-Based Curriculum: Framework for Respectfully Teaching About Cultures” and having co-edited “Knowledge of the Elders: The Iroquois Condolence Cane Tradition.” Both texts offer readers a means to apply the wisdom embedded in Iroquois teachings in modern society.

Cornelius shared that her latest book began through her curiosity. “I wanted to know if documents existed that recorded the voices of our Oneida, Stockbridge, and Brothertown ancestors when they were removing to what is now Wisconsin. I also wondered what the Menominee and Ho-Chunk ancestors said to us as we negotiated for land here.”

The research process was cumbersome. Cornelius stated, “For 10 years, I researched available original journals of Commissioners designated to record actual treaty negotiations, letters sent to and received by the Secretary of War and Lewis Cass, who was the Governor of Michigan Territory, as well as Senate and House minutes. Many of these documents have been preserved on microfilm and are handwritten, which took a long time to obtain and type up.”

The finished product is an invaluable account of the nation-to-nation negotiations that ultimately shaped the lands of the state that was to become known as Wisconsin. Just as valuable, the text gives voices to the Indigenous leaders who served as representatives of their nations.

Cornelius explained, “I would like readers to become knowledgeable and impressed with our ancestors’ diplomatic negotiating skills. They preserved Indigenous nations’ land for our people, but the voices of our ancestors have not been widely shared. That motivated me to write this book.”

This book is not the first time Cornelius has used her platform to share the words of Indigenous People. In 1983, she captured the words of Hilary Waukau, vice-chairman of the Menominee Tribal Legislature. In an article titled “This Land is Our Land,” she recounted Waukau’s ire over a proposed Exxon mine: “The Indians are the best environmentalists in the world. We live off the land, with the land, and respect the land. It’s Mother Earth and it’s sacred to us.” That sacredness spans from the time Indigenous people were created through to perpetuity.

Cornelius wrote with a diverse audience in mind, imagining “Indigenous people, students, professors, and historians” benefiting from rediscovering what transpired through the words of those who lived it. The book has been well-received, with prior presentations resulting in questions that expose the shortcomings of an education that solely focuses on the voices of the dominant culture.

“A consistent theme I hear from readers, and those in my presentations, is the question of why they weren’t taught this before now,” Cornelius said. “Why haven’t the Indigenous voices been heard? Why doesn’t our education system include Indigenous voices?”

Cornelius’s Feb. 20 visit to CMN is a free event. It will be synchronously broadcasted to the school’s Keshena campus, allowing for interaction with the author through the WebEx system the school uses for its class meetings.

Come join Cornelius to learn about the Ongwehoweh who guided the Indigenous nations of Wisconsin through their treaty era and who still inspire their descendants to this day.

Dragon Force saga full of twists and turns

I felt like a bit of fantasy this week so I selected “Dragon Force” by Lucia Ashta. Once I got past Ashta’s strange names of places and things, it was a pretty good read. After only a few chapters I noticed that the story has strong religious undertones, giving it an almost parable-like feel.

The adventure is set on Planet Origins. It has two suns, the Auxle and Suxle, and a purple moon known as the Plune. The population of this area of the planet are the Ooba people. For centuries they have been ruled by chieftains. The current chieftain is named Pumpoo.

Ages ago, the Ooba fought with the Aragon people and were forced to move to this part of the planet. According to Pumpoo and his forbearers, the Ooba are sworn protectors of the dragons that live in the higher elevations.

No one questions why the huge, fire breathing, flying beasts need protectors. If Pumpoo says it is so, then it is so. It is an honor to be allowed to join the Dragon Force. The dragons rarely leave the highest elevations, but when they do the Force is there to calm them and keep the people safe.

As the story opens we meet 17-year-old Anira, her brother, Rone, and sister, Traja. They are forced to live a private life on the far edge of the village. Pumpoo has decreed twins are forbidden and any born would be put to death. Anira’s mother has managed to hide Anira and her brother.

That is all the more important since Anira is invisible. She has spent her entire life hiding in plain sight and she longs for a normal life where she could have friends and find purpose for her life. Little does she know that her wish will soon be granted beyond her wildest dreams.

Pumpoo has called all for volunteers to join the Dragon Force. Rone and older sister Traja are accepted as trainees but Anira can only sneak around the fringes and observe.

It is during the swearing-in ceremony that Anira notices Pumpoo draining energy from everyone but her. Could he be using the forbidden force known as Faithum? Why would he forbid it and then use it?

Anira grieves her strangeness and walks to the very edge of the forest to where the trees give way to the high mountains. There she discovers a badly wounded baby dragon. It is small and stunted, so she surmises that it was pushed out of the nest but survived.

She names the little red dragon Rosie and takes her home. Their mother treats Rosie’s injuries but insists she give the dragon to Dean, the leader of the Alpha group of Dragon Force. When she tries to do that, Rosie refuses to leave her side. It isn’t long before Dean realizes Anira is there, and against all her fears Anira feels that she can trust him with her secrets.

Before long, Pumpoo makes his first move to gain even more power. Dean and his Dragon Force members have been preparing for this and soon find themselves in battle with the entire Ooba village. That is when Anira’s innate Faithum power appears and she is able to quell the battle. Dean reveals that everything on their planet possess Faithum and by banding together they can defeat any evil.

Soon they are aware of the presence of the Shadow People. Their ability to communicate with and even ride dragons put a whole new light on Faithum and the battle against Pumpoo. When the final confrontation comes it will take the combined faith and determination of the Dragon Force, the Shadow People, and the fearsome dragons to destroy Pumpoo and free their planet. Anira and her siblings are free to explore their unique status and how they fit into the amazing story of their people.

Northland Pines no match for Witt-Birn

By DUSTIN RIESE
Correspondent

At this point in the basketball season, most teams have two goals in mind.

First, you want to be as healthy as possible leading into the stretch run. Second, you want to be playing your best basketball heading into the playoffs.

When it comes to Wittenberg-Birnamwood, not only are they healthy, but at 16-2 overall, they have been playing great basketball all season and that didn't stop Jan. 29.

Facing off against Northland Pines (7-11) for one of their final non-conference games of the season, it was the Chargers who continued their winning ways as they dominated the Eagles in every facet 72-34.

"We handled ourselves well tonight," head coach Nick Mechelke said. "We really focused on playing smart, and we pretty much did that tonight."

You couldn't have asked for a much better start for the Chargers than how they opened the game; they could do no wrong on either end of the floor. Whether it be the ability of Rory Salvesen to get to the rim or knock down shots, she nearly outscored the Eagles roster by herself as she finished the night with a game-high 21 points.

Throw in the 16 points from Harper Rogowski and 14 points from Faith Resch and the Chargers had three players land in double figures as they controlled the offense most of the first half. Anytime you can get that much production from three players, you have to love your chances as a group, and with a 44-13 lead at the half, Mechelke was extremely proud of how his team came out and set the tone early.

"I was really pleased with how we played in that first half," he said. "Offensively, we had tremendous balance from top to bottom, and we just played well from the start."

Had the Chargers not scored a single point the rest of the night, they still would've done enough to win as their defense was equally as good as the offense.

Vienna Klemett and Aubrey Beyer took a while to get things going, but they continued to play well for the Eagles. Most of their production came in the second half, but when you face such a large deficit it becomes more about finding some positive takeaways as opposed to winning the actual game.

One of the takeaways the Eagles have from this game was having their offense play much better in the second half, but a lot of that can be attributed to the Chargers not being as aggressive on the defensive end.

Through the midway point in the second half, the Eagles managed to keep pace with the Chargers as Wittenberg-Birnamwood outscored them 17-16 to push their lead to 61-29. That was until Rogowski came through with five quick points to push their lead to 66-29 as the running clock was approaching.

Even with Emma Weber connecting on a contested three late in the game for Northland Pines, their sluggish first half loomed large as Rogowski and Kit Stewart closed out the scoring for the Chargers in what was another impressive showing.

Although it will be the offense that gets most of the talk in this one, don't discredit the defense as that side of the ball played equally as well.

"Our defense has been our calling card all season," Mechelke said. "Tonight was one of those nights where our defense helped lead to our offense. We were intense defensively and were far more consistent than we have been in recent weeks."

In the Central Wisconsin East Conference, the Chargers are within striking distance of a conference title, but with two losses and both coming to Bonduel, it will be an uphill climb for the Chargers to achieve a conference crown.

Wittenberg-Birnamwood's Rory Salvesen pulls up and shoots in the team's 74-32 win over Northland Pines on Jan. 29. The sophomore guard led the Chargers with 21 points, including a 3-pointer and a pair of free throws. She also had three rebounds, three assists and three steals.

Chargers shut down Northland Pines for DH sweep

By DUSTIN RIESE
Correspondent

After watching the girls take care of business earlier in the night, it was the boys turn to take the court as Wittenberg-Birnamwood played host to the Northland Pines Eagles on Jan. 29. After weathering a barrage of 3-point baskets in the first half, the Chargers got things rolling using a 16-4 run to open the second half to pull away for the 57-34 victory.

“Great effort by our kids tonight to finish,” head coach Garrett Rogowski said. “Our defense was outstanding, and we had a very balanced attack from the start. That is something we haven’t had a ton of this season so to get that was very promising.”

Known for their 3-point shooting ability, the Eagles came out on fire early as 18 of their 20 first half points came from beyond the arc. Two of them came from Jack Albrecht with Cody Vojta, Jonathan Miller, Anthony Halada and AJ Muench all getting in on the act.

Thankfully the Chargers offense was able to respond, but with the Eagles going to work on the outside, Marshall Fraaza went to work on the inside to put the Chargers in front 7-6.

Trailing by five after a pair of Northland Pines’ triples, the Chargers continued to battle back as a Hayden Miller triple made things a one possession game. That was followed by a pair of Jett Rogowski baskets to put the Chargers back in front 19-18.

It took nearly the entire first half for the Eagles to score on something other than a 3-point shot, but after taking a 20-19 lead late in the first half, it was the Chargers finishing strong. Sparked by Rogowski and Oliver Fraaza, the Chargers ended the first half on a 9-0 run and took a 28-20 lead into the break.

Things only got worse from there for the Eagles as an early Keegan Schmid bucket extended the lead by 10 before reaching 14 on the Oliver Fraaza triple. After not scoring on a single 2-point attempt in the first half, it seems ironic that the first bucket of the second half by the Eagles came on a 2-pointer, with Mylo Albrecht getting one to fall.

That was followed by a flurry of buckets from Rogowski and Boone Schairer as the Chargers busted the game open with a 16-2 run to open the second half and take a 44-22 lead. Add that to the end of the first half and the Chargers used a 25-2 run to take what was a one-point deficit and open up a massive lead.

From there, it was all about getting everyone involved as the Chargers’ offense was starting to find their rhythm.

That allowed Jaden Clark to get on the scoresheet late, as did Miller and Connor Groshek. Even with Aiden Minx and Vojta starting to get inside to draw fouls, the 3-point shot wasn’t there for the Eagles.

Not only was this a great win for the Chargers, but to do it in front of some very important people is what made Rogowski happy.

“It was really nice to celebrate the Wittenberg-Birnamwood junior Jett Rogowski goes up for what would be part of his 17 points scored against Northland Pines on Jan. 29.

TINA BACON

Birnamwood 1953 team and their state qualifying berth tonight,” he said. “Six of the guys who played on that team were here tonight, which is very cool to see. That alone seemed to give us some extra motivation as the kids wanted to put on a good show.”

Rogowski led all scorers with 17 points, with Oliver Fraaza adding 11 as the Chargers improved to 8-7 with the win.

The Eagles were led by Vojta and his eight points, with Halada adding six to bring their record to 6-13 on for the season.

Bay Port jumped out to an 18-10 lead at the half, and even though Pulaski won the second half 32-27, it wasn’t enough for the win.

Residents invited to participate in WCC resolution process

By NEW MEDIA STAFF

The Wisconsin Conservation Congress (WCC) invites all Wisconsinites to take part in its annual spring hearing process.

The WCC is an independent organization of residents that advises the Wisconsin Natural Resources Board and the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources (DNR) on how to responsibly manage Wisconsin’s natural resources.

Wisconsinites can submit proposed resolutions via the online process now through Feb. 26. Resolutions must meet the following criteria:

- The concern must be of statewide impact.
- The concern must be practical, achievable and reasonable.
- The concern must be within the mission and vision of the WCC.

An individual may submit no more than two resolutions per year. Those interested in submitting a resolution are encouraged to reach out to the resolution review committee or their WCC county chair for guidance in drafting a resolution.

Additional tips on preparing a resolution are available on the WCC and DNR’s spring hearings webpage.

At the close of the submission process, the resolutions will be reviewed by a committee of WCC delegates to ensure they meet the criteria for inclusion and will be prepared for the online input, which kicks off April 10, and will close April 13.

For further information or questions, contact Terri Roehrig, executive committee member of the WCC, at 920-540-2775.

Shawano wrestlers clinch conference title

A 72-12 win over Xavier on Feb. 1 clinched the conference title for Shawano with a 6-0 mark.

“I’m most proud of this group for stepping up and wrestling as a team,” coach Mike Homan said. “As we finished our conference season 6-0, I think back to all of the hard work that has been put into the practice room this season. This entire team of boys and girls have worked hard and earned this conference title.”

The dual meet started off at 132 pounds with Owen Montour earning a fall over Dante Vargas of Xavier in 2:16. Drake Herm and Kody Popelka both earned forfeits at 138 and 144 pounds, respectively.

At 150, John Faulkner of Xavier earned a fall over Marcus Cicero in 2:54. At 157, Carsen Herm earned a fall over Jerome Erimas in 58 seconds, and at 165, Drew Chelberg earned a fall over Alexander Marg in 3:44.

At 175, Mason Theis earned a fall over Aaron Vanden Heuvel in 1:36, and at 190 and 215, respectively, Connor Chelberg and Jack Dietz each received forfeits. At 285, Eddie Heuring of Xavier earned a fall over Brayen Boivin in 2:50.

At 106, Dylan Gartner received a forfeit. At 113, Dane Hodkiewicz earned a fall over Adrian Morales in 2:33. At 120 and 126, respectively, Alex Montour and Austin Stickney both received forfeits.

Shawano also used the evening to honor its youth wrestlers and seniors.

“Carsen Herm at 157 has been a solid varsity wrestler for the last three years,” Homan said. “He always battles hard and in most cases earns a pin. He is a great kid to have in your varsity lineup and will always be remembered for his pinning capability.”

Drew Chelberg has been improving all year long, Homan said.

“He is really starting to wrestle well at the right time,” the coach said.

Mason Theis wrestled a lot of tough matches for the Hawks.

“He has sacrificed a lot this year by dropping down to 175,” Homan said. “Last year, he wrestled at 182 and 190. He never complains. He just gets back to work and works hard in the practice room.”

Homan said all the seniors left a great impact on the team.

“Kids like Drake Herm, Connor Chelberg and Dylan Hodkiewicz always battled and fought hard for team victories,” he said. “Alex Montour filled many vacancies where we needed him to be.”

At 12-4 overall, Shawano prepares for regional action Feb. 10.

Shawano girls take first at conference meet

Onna Hermann took first place at 120 pounds and several other Shawano wrestlers finished in the top five at the NEC/Bay Conference conference tournament on Feb. 3.

All told, Shawano sacred 93 points while giving up 86, which placed them in first at the event in Waupaca.

“The girls had a good day of wrestling, earning enough team points to take first,” coach Mike Homan said. “Onna Herman wrestled very well on the way to pinning all of her opponents and taking first place. She was our leading points scorer today. She has been working on more offense, and the change has really helped her score more points.”

Earning second-place finishes were Jenna Moede at 114 and Caitlyn Moede at 126. Third-place finishes were recorded by Courtney Schenk at 152 and Lily Tomas at 235. Adalyn Barkley placed fourth at 138, as did Maddie Moesch at 120. Lauren Harkey finished in fifth place at 120.

Breleigh Thornock took sixth place at 126 pounds.

“Caitlyn had a nice tournament today and ran into some tough competition in her finals match. All of her other victories today were falls,” Homan said. “She also scored a lot of team points. Maddie Moesch and Lauren Harkey both did a great job also in the 120 bracket. I really like how both of them keep competing and never give up. They wrestled some tough matches today were very competitive.”

Homan also had positive words about Schenk and Tomas.

“They both showed good improvement over the last few weeks,” he said. “I can see them getting better in every match that they wrestle.”

The sectional tournament in Kimberly is another week away.

Gillett/Suring’s boys wrestling team hosted a quad invite Feb. 3 with teams from Lena, Elcho and Menominee, Michigan, joining them on the mat. It was also Senior Night, during which Gillett/Suring honored Parker Zahn, Carter Whisman and Mason Micooley.

Schultz' 24 points not enough as Appleton East takes down Pulaski

By DUSTIN RIESE
Correspondent

It's never easy to go on the road and win in high school basketball, and the Pulaski Red Raiders (10-9) found that out the hard way Feb. 3.

Facing off against Appleton East (4-13) in a non-conference tilt, it was a story of two players going head to head in an epic player vs. player matchup.

It was the Joey LaChapell vs. Colin Schultz as both of these players put their teams on their back, especially during the second half. Schultz paced the way for the Red Raiders with 24 points, but that wasn't enough to take the spotlight from LaChapell, who was honored pregame for becoming the Patriots' all-time leading scorer. He responded by dropping 36 points for the Patriots, including 17 straight at one point to lift the Patriots to the 79-70 victory.

Judging by how the start of things went, you would've never guessed that nearly 150 points would be scored as neither team was able to find the bucket in the first three minutes.

The back-and-forth affair continued from there,

Ethan and Bohdan Schmidt managed to keep things close at 21-18, but it was LaChapell coming through with another triple to push the lead to 24-18.

LaChapell was just getting started as he combined with Prestigiacomo to push the lead to 28-21 with Jacob Weisbach stretching things out to 34-26 late in the first half. Fortunately for the Red Raiders, they managed to chip away at things late as the corner triple from Bryce Wotruba pulled Pulaski within five while Jossie and Schultz closed out the first half to make things 36-32.

Expecting more of the same in the second half, both teams exchanged buckets to open things up before the LaChapell show got going as his four points pushed the Patriots lead to 43-34.

It was time for Schultz to take over as he not only scored seven of his team's next nine points to pull the Red Raiders to within 49-47, but he went toe-to-toe with LaChapell for a good portion of the second half. Once Schultz got rolling, it opened things up for the rest of the Pulaski offense as Dylan Dorn tied things up before Dixon Holewinski gave the Red Raiders a 52-51 lead.

That was when LaChapell began to take over as he went on to score 17 straight points for the Patriots helping them not only stay close, but giving them the lead on several occasions.

The same can be said for Schultz throughout the second half as he was able to match LaChapell with several buckets of his own as the Red Raiders were within 65-64 in the final few minutes.

It came down to the free throw line to determine the game.

Spooner had 43 shots on goal, with only one finding the back of the net. Antigo had 19 shots. Goalie Nolan Bunnell had 42 saves for Antigo.

As for penalties, Antigo was called for seven infractions and served 14 minutes. The Rails were called on five penalties and served 10 minutes.

Rhineland 10 Shawano 4

The Hodags led 3-0 in the first period before Karson Stoss first put Shawano on the board at 14:50.

The two teams traded the first four goals in the second period, but then Rhineland added four unanswered goals to take a 9-3 lead. Second-period goals for Shawano came from Michael Dillenberg at 5:18 with assists from Cam Schroeder and Stoss, and then from Bryce Lammers at 6:59 with a Hunter Jones assist.

Tyson Lyons had 15 saves on 20 shots on goal, while Kaiden Thornborrow had 14 saves on against 19 shots.

The Hawks were penalized six times for 12 minutes. The Hodags were penalized eight times for 16 minutes.

After the non-conference loss, Shawano's record stands at 7-11 overall. Shawano 5, Pacelli 1

Shawano's hockey players didn't have as many shots on goal as Stevens Point Pacelli, but the ones they did they made count.

The Cardinals led the Hawks 22-16 on shots on goal, but the scoreboard showed Shawano on top with a 5-1 final score on Jan. 30.

Karson Stoss started out the Hawks' scoring with a goal at 15:52 in the first period. With an assist from Blake Knope, the Hawks led 1-0 at the end of the period.

Knope, who had a hat trick on the night, scored his first goal at 1:45 in the second period with an assist from Wyatt Schroeder. Shawano took a 3-0 lead thanks to a Cam Schroeder goal with an assist from Wyatt Schroeder.

Knope's second goal came at 2:44 in the third period with Stoss assisting. Pacelli scored their only goal at 8:07, with Knope getting his third at 15:06 with another Wyatt Schroeder assist.

Mosinee 8, Antigo 1

Owen Dickman scored Antigo's only goal in its 6-1 loss to Mosinee on Jan. 30.

The Red Robins were called for two penalties for four minutes, while the Indians were called on three infractions for six minutes.

Antigo only managed 11 shots on goals compared to Mosinee's 63. Nolan Bunnell had 55 saves for the Red Robins.

Timer broken on Swift's 15 minutes of fame

Have you ever had a neighbor or friend who shared way too much about themselves to the point you feel the need to avoid them so your brain doesn't push out relevant information about life in general in exchange for stuff you don't really want to know?

I feel like that whenever a news media snippet about Taylor Swift appears. Every time I turn on the television or jump onto Facebook, there's something about Swift, usually several things. It seems like since 2023 started — and it has spilled into 2024 — the singer has permeated all aspects of life.

Swift has always been a fixture when it comes to the world of music, but now she's busted out into sports commentary ever since she started dating Travis Kelce with the Kansas City Chiefs. Now with her efforts to get younger generations out to vote in elections, political commentators are losing their marbles, as well.

To prove my case, I present Exhibit A, the Google search this morning when I punched in "Taylor Swift" for news headlines:

- USA Today: Some Republicans fear Taylor Swift could influence the election for Biden.
- HuffPost: Wall Street Journal shreds 'Trumpy internet trolls' with blunt question about Taylor Swift.
- NBC: Jeweler behind Taylor Swift's 'TNT' bracelet reveals Travis Kelce purchased matching bangles for the couple.
- Yahoo News: Pentagon to MAGA world: You need to calm down over Taylor Swift.
- The Washington Post: Why Taylor Swift's globe-trotting in private jets is getting scrutinized.

• New York Times: Taylor Swift is a 'treasure,' says Liz Cheney, a prime Trump critic.

• The Guardian: Grammys set to celebrate female musicians as Taylor Swift eyes a record-breaking win.

I will stop here, as there's only so much readers can take in, but suffice to say there's more topics that have made headlines in the last day or two about Swift. The only topic that's probably not on the internet, as far as I've seen, is having a nutrition expert go into detail about what the woman had for breakfast today.

It's gotten to the point where Gannett hired a reporter to exclusively report on Swift. As other newspapers are figuring out how to report the news with smaller staffs, the news company is having a reporter chase after Swift and report on aspects of her. He might very well be the one who finally talks to the nutrition expert about Swift's breakfast.

Thankfully, Swift isn't leading off every television program to the point where the need-to-know info about government and the wars in Israel and Ukraine are being pushed aside. Still, it feels like we're heading in that direction, and as a journalist, that bothers me. Becoming numb to the horrors of the world because we're addicted to Swift like a bunch of junkies is not the way to build a civilized society.

There are billions of people in the world, and everyone has a story to tell. As a reporter, I've told hundreds of stories of ordinary people doing interesting things — book authors, musicians, comedians, even teddy bear collectors — because everyone deserves some time in the spotlight. However, Swift's 15 minutes of fame has been extended to the point where I say: "Stop the ride. I want to get off."

I'm pretty sure the timer is broken.

I get that people are curious about celebrities, and there have been other instances where information overload has been reached on the talented people we adore. Where does it end, though? A British princess was killed because the media was desperate to chase her down for photos and tidbits of information to turn into stories. Is it going to take a tragedy for the Taylor mania to subside?

We stop at freeway off-ramps to rest on long car trips. We turn off the television when the news is getting too depressing. We take mental health days when the stresses of work and family get to be too much. Even carnival rides that are fun must come to an end at some point. I think we need a "Swift stop" on information about Taylor Swift. There are other people in the world. Let's pay attention to some of them for a while.

YOUR RIGHT TO KNOW

Don't charge records requesters for redactions

You've already paid for them. They're yours, but if you want to see the public records that show what your government is doing, some state lawmakers want you to pay again — this time, for redactions.

That's right. They want you to pay more to get less.

Currently, the state's Open Records Law allows public officials to charge only for the "actual, necessary, and direct cost" of copying, mailing and in some cases locating public records. Senate Bill 789, which the Wisconsin Senate recently passed, barely more than a month after it was introduced, would allow law enforcement and corrections agencies to add another fee, for the cost of redacting audio and video.

At a Jan. 3 hearing, proponents of the bill complained about the increasing number of requests and the complex and time-consuming process of redacting body camera and dash camera recordings. State Sen. Jesse James, R-Altoona, the bill's lead Senate sponsor, testified it takes an average of an hour and a half to review and redact each hour of video. This, he said, can take up "valuable agency time, especially for departments that are already understaffed."

James, a former cop and chief of police, said he knows "firsthand how our law enforcement departments and agencies can be scrutinized, especially in the last few years. They face open records requests constantly, and while they are happy to fulfill them to keep our government open and transparent, they would appreciate an opportunity to be properly compensated" for the time it takes.

Others also argued the bill, now awaiting action in the state Assembly, is a way to help law enforcement "recoup" their time and resources.

Such reasoning runs counter to the spirit and letter of the Open Records Law, which holds that providing people with public records is "an integral part of the routine duties of officers and employees whose responsibility it is to provide such information."

Get that? "Routine."

Fulfilling records requests is already supposed to be part of what these public officials are paid to do, not something extra for which they should be paid again. Imagine police sending a crime victim a bill for the time detectives spend ruling out suspects. After all, these investigations are time-consuming and complex. Why should everyone else have to foot the bill for an investigation into a crime that only affected one person?

It is disingenuous to claim this fee is recuperation of resources because your tax dollars are already supposed to have purchased the work of making public records public. Allowing charges for redactions might even incentivize some records custodians to take more time processing requests.

Worse, imposing what can easily run to hundreds and even thousands of dollars of redaction costs will make obtaining certain records unaffordable to some requesters, including media outlets that obtain videos as a vital check on law enforcement and corrections workers.

The bill has drawn opposition from the American Civil Liberties Union of Wisconsin, which has this to say: "Lack of transparency and police accountability creates further distrust in law enforcement, making community engagement with law enforcement more fraught and less effective. Ultimately, proposals like SB-789 could allow law enforcement to shirk their obligation to be publicly accountable, and further erode the belief that police protect communities rather than only their own."

Transparency serves a public good. The law says there is a presumption these records are public, regardless of who requests them or why they're making the request.

Charging individual requesters instead of reallocating resources and taking a closer look at budget priorities sends a dangerous message. The public deserves a system that treats an essential function of government as, well, part of the job.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Biden committed to moving forward

To the editor:

President Joe Biden lifts up hardworking Americans who are bringing us back from the pandemic.

The U.S. economy is rebounding more quickly than any other country. The unemployment rate has dropped to 3.9%. He has created policies that have led to better paying jobs.

Bidenomics is working, reducing inflation and lowering health/child care and gas prices. Some prices continue to be high, but Biden has stood up to corporate greed.

Biden is committed to keep all of us moving forward — leaving no one behind.

Shirley Hinze, Shawano

Samaritan's Purse thanks volunteers

To the editor:

Generosity throughout Shawano contributed to a successful shoebox gift collection season at drop-off locations for the Samaritan's Purse project Operation Christmas Child.

Across the U.S., the project collected 10 million shoebox gifts in 2023. Combined with those collected from partnering countries in 2023, the ministry is now sending over 11.3 million shoebox gifts to children worldwide, including many who are suffering from war, poverty, disease and disaster.

Through shoeboxes — packed with fun toys, school supplies, and personal care items — Shawano area volunteers brought joy to children in need around the world.

Each gift-filled shoebox is a tangible expression of God's love, and it is often the first gift these children have ever received. Through the continued generosity of donors since 1993, Operation Christmas Child has collected and delivered more than 220 million gift-filled shoeboxes to children in more than 170 countries and territories.

Across Wisconsin, shoebox packers often shop for deals on shoebox items throughout the year, and many serve at a deeper level by becoming a year-round volunteer. Information about ways area participants can get involved year-round can also be found at samaritanaspurse.org/occ or by calling 630-474-9478.

Although local drop-off locations for shoebox gifts are closed until Nov. 18-25, anyone can still be a part of this life-changing project by conveniently packing a shoebox gift online in just a few simple clicks at samaritanaspurse.org/buildonline.

These simple gifts, packed with love, send a message to children worldwide that they are loved and not forgotten.

49ers looking for a better outcome in Super Bowl LVIII

By ROB MAADDI
AP Pro Football Writer

Patrick Mahomes, Travis Kelce and the Kansas City Chiefs are heading to Las Vegas with a chance for a rare repeat while facing the San Francisco 49ers in a Super Bowl rematch from four years ago.

The Chiefs beat Lamar Jackson and the No. 1-seeded Baltimore Ravens 17-10 in the AFC championship game Jan. 28 to advance to the Super Bowl for the fourth time in five years. A few hours later, Brock Purdy rallied the No. 1-seeded 49ers to a 34-31 victory over the Detroit Lions in the NFC title game.

The Chiefs (14-6) are aiming to become the first back-to-back champions since Tom Brady and the New England Patriots did it following the 2003-04 seasons.

Purdy — who was still two years away from being the last pick of the 2022 NFL draft the last time the teams played in the Super Bowl — will try to lead the 49ers (14-5) to a record-tying sixth title in their eighth appearance.

The teams meet at Allegiant Stadium on Feb. 11. Mahomes and the Chiefs overcame a 20-10 fourth-quarter deficit and beat the 49ers 31-20 to give coach Andy Reid his first Super Bowl victory on Feb. 2, 2020. Brady and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers spoiled Kansas City's repeat bid the following year.

The Chiefs will become just the third team to play in four Super Bowls over a five-year span. Only the Pittsburgh Steelers in the 1970s, the Dallas Cowboys in the 1990s and the Patriots in the 2000s

Love leads the Packers to playoffs

Strong first season as starting QB ends with disappointing loss to 49ers

By JOSH DUBOW
AP Pro Football Writer

For all that went well in Jordan Love's first season as the starting quarterback for the Green Bay Packers, the end proved disappointing.

The Packers went home after a crushing playoff loss.

Love threw his second interception of the game with Green Bay trying to mount a late-game drive to prolong its season, and the Packers blew a fourth-quarter lead, falling 24-21 to the San Francisco 49ers in the divisional round on Jan. 27.

"I think it'll sting for a while," Love said. "Watching all the games going forward it will sting just knowing that we had an opportunity to win, and we dropped the ball on that one. It'll sting for a while, but we'll be able to look back on it and see some good things we did."

Love accomplished plenty in his first season in place of Aaron Rodgers. He helped the Packers (10-9) overcome a 2-5 start to the season to make the playoffs. He followed that up with a three-touchdown performance in a wild-card win at Dallas land had Green Bay in position to knock off the top-seeded 49ers.

Love threw TD passes on back-to-back drives to open the second half to put the Packers in the lead.

That gave Love 23 touchdown passes and only one interception in nine-plus games, but his run of protecting the ball ended at the worst possible time.

He threw his first interception since Dec. 11 to set up a field goal by the 49ers.

Green Bay's defense then let the Niners drive for the go-ahead score with 1:07 left, and Love was unable to lead the comeback, ending any chance with his second interception.

Quarterback Jordan Love, running back Aaron Jones and teammates celebrate a touchdown during the 2023 season. Unfortunately, the season ended in the NFC Divisional Round with loss to the San Francisco 49ers.

and 2010s won three Super Bowls in a five-year span.

Mahomes rallied the Chiefs for a 38-35 comeback win over the Philadelphia Eagles in the Super Bowl last year. They beat Miami 26-7 in the wild-card round and defeated the Bills 27-24 in Buffalo the next week in Mahomes' first career play-off game on the road besides Super Bowls.

The 49ers were dominated by the Eagles in the NFC title game last year in a game that saw Purdy suffer a significant elbow injury that required surgery. He returned for the season opener and helped them earn a first-round bye. Purdy led a 24-21 comeback win over Green Bay in January and brought the Niners back from a 17-point deficit against the Lions.

Only New England and Pittsburgh have more Super Bowl wins than San Francisco, which last won it following the 1994 season.

Reid will lead a team in the Super Bowl for the fifth time, moving into a tie with Tom Landry for third most behind Bill Belichick's nine and Don Shula's six. Reid coached the Eagles when the Patriots beat them to repeat 19 years ago.

Niners coach Kyle Shanahan returns to the Super Bowl after losing to Reid in his first crack at it. Shanahan was Atlanta's offensive coordinator when the Falcons blew a 28-3 lead against Brady and the Patriots in Super Bowl LI.

Mahomes, a two-time NFL and Super Bowl MVP, will start in his fourth Super Bowl, tied with Joe Montana, Terry Bradshaw, Peyton Manning, Roger Staubach and Jim Kelly for third-most behind Brady's 10 and John Elway's five.

San Francisco running back Christian McCaffrey (23), left, and Kansas City tight end Travis Kelce (87), above, do their best to outrun Green Bay's defense. The Chiefs are aiming to become the first back-to-back champions since Tom Brady and the New England Patriots did it following the 2003-04 seasons. They will meet the 49ers at Allegiant Stadium on Feb. 11.

Love grows to become undisputed leader of the Pack

By JACOB WESTENDORF
Green & Gold Express

The Green Bay Packers' 2024 season was always going to be defined pretty simply.

Do they have a long-term quarterback? If they don't, are they in a position in the draft to grab a guy like USC's Caleb Williams or North Carolina's Drake Maye?

After Aaron Rodgers was traded to the New York Jets in April 2023, all eyes were focused on Jordan Love.

Love was drafted following Green Bay's 37-20 loss to the San Francisco 49ers in the NFC Championship game in January 2020.

Instead of a receiver or something to help the team get over the hump and into the Super Bowl, Brian Gutekunst infamously looked toward the future.

After two MVP seasons, and a disappointing finale, Aaron Rodgers was gone, and Gutekunst was going to get a chance to see his legacy pick in action for the first time.

Love's security beyond 2023 was far from a guarantee. Gutekunst said himself they envisioned the contract extension they gave Rodgers after the 2021 season to be a multi-year commitment.

Had Rodgers returned for 2023, Love would have never taken a snap as the preferred starter in Green Bay. That's something that Gutekunst had presumably made peace with.

If he was willing to punt entirely on the pick, surely he'd be willing to move on if Love were to struggle badly enough to put the Packers in the top five of April's draft.

After a clunky stretch in October saw the Packers drop to 2-5, it looked like the Packers were headed down the path of a full scale rebuild, including at the quarterback position, rather than a quick reset and launching back into playoff contention.

Love's season, which started off hot, leading the league in touchdown passes after his first two starts of the season, had fizzled.

Love was now at the top of the league in another category, interceptions.

That wasn't all on Love. The Packers fielded the youngest team in the league. His oldest receivers were in their second year in the league.

The offensive line, which was built around All-Pro left tackle David Bakhtiari, was in shambles with Bakhtiari being placed on injured reserve before a Week 4 tilt against the Detroit Lions.

Love saw the calendar turn to November with a lot at stake. Gutekunst gave a lukewarm, at best, endorsement of Love after seven games.

"We've got 10 games left," Gutekunst said during his midseason availability. "These are going to be very important 10 games. I think he's done a lot of really good things."

He said he liked the way Love responded to the adversity, how he led the team.

"Again, we've got to be better as a unit, and I expect that to happen over the next 10 games," Gutekunst said. "And I think that we're going through some things that we knew we would go through. We haven't had the results that we want, but I do like the way guys are responding to things."

Love and the offense had a simple choice from there. Shape up, or ship out.

The offense, and Love specifically, dazzled from there.

The turning point in the season was after the Packers split two games to the Los Angeles Rams and Pittsburgh Steelers to get to 3-6. They were facing a talented

The turning point in the season was after the Packers split two games to the Los Angeles Rams and Pittsburgh Steelers to get to 3-6. They were facing a talented Los Angeles Chargers team at Lambeau Field and trailing when Jordan Love and the offense took flight. Love led a game-winning drive where he hit Romeo Doubs for a go-ahead touchdown that would hold up in a 23-20 victory. Love was just getting warmed up. His best two-game stretch of the season came in two nationally televised games, Detroit on Thanksgiving Day and at home against Kansas City. Matt LaFleur allowed his growing quarterback to throw the ball all over the lot. Love responded with six touchdown passes, zero interceptions, and most importantly, two wins over teams that ended up playing on championship Sunday.

Los Angeles Chargers team at Lambeau Field and trailing when Love and the offense took flight.

Love led a game-winning drive where he hit Romeo Doubs for a go-ahead touchdown that would hold up in a 23-20 victory.

Love threw for more than 300 yards, which made him the team's first 300-yard passer since Rodgers carved up the Baltimore Ravens in December 2021.

Love was just getting warmed up. His best two-game stretch of the season came in two nationally televised games, Detroit on Thanksgiving Day and at home against Kansas City.

Matt LaFleur allowed his growing quarterback to throw the ball all over the lot. Love responded with six touchdown passes, zero interceptions, and most importantly, two wins over teams that ended up playing on championship Sunday.

The Packers and their offense were rolling.

That was not the end of the adversity for the season. Back-to-back poor performances by Green Bay's defense led to disappointing losses to the New York Giants and Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

The Packers were faced with a pretty simple scenario. Win their last three games, or sit at home and watch the playoffs that felt like destiny after their two wins against Detroit and Kansas City.

Love turned in three great performances against Carolina, Minnesota and Chicago.

Love did not turn the ball over in these three games, and was dynamite late in the game when the team needed a big play.

Romeo Doubs made a big play down the sideline against Carolina to set up a game-winning field goal in the Packers' 33-30 victory against the Panthers.

Love would hit Jayden Reed and Tucker Kraft for two big completions against Chicago to seal the season finale and catapult the Packers into the playoffs.

Getting into the postseason earned Love an extra $500,000 from a contract extension he signed in May in lieu of the Packers exercising his fifth-year option.

He'd earn more money a week later as he carved up Dan Quinn's stingy Dallas Cowboys defense.

Love threw three touchdown passes from three different arm angles, and the Packers piled up 48 points en route to a 48-32 victory that earned them another trip to San Francisco.

The clock would strike midnight on Green Bay's Cinderella season in San Francisco. Love threw two interceptions in the fourth quarter that will serve as a learning experience for him moving forward.

Unfortunately, those learning experiences came at the expense of winning a playoff game and having a chance to play for the conference title.

The Packers lost 24-21. While the season came to a bitter end, there is no way to categorize the 2023 season other than a massive success.

Love grew from someone who could have been one-and-done as the team's starting quarterback to the unquestioned leader and quarterback of the future for the Green Bay Packers.

In the NFL, you either have a quarterback or you have nothing. The Packers have rarely known the situation of not having a quarterback in their illustrious existence.

That is a trend that will continue moving forward thanks to Love's MVP-level play to end the 2023 season.

Green Bay's offense as a whole took its biggest failure of the season in the Denver game. Just four games prior, Denver had given up 70 points to the Miami Dolphins. This really felt like a get-right game for the Packers offense, but it once again was unable to score in the first half and found itself down 16-3 midway through the third quarter. Green Bay was able to make somewhat of a comeback, as the final score landed at 19-17, but the problem with the lack of offense still existed.

Packers open with a 3-6 record

Early season struggles created many questions in Green Bay

By LUKE REIMER
GREEN & GOLD EXPRESS

Coming into the 2023-24 season, no one really knew what to expect out of the Green Bay Packers. Jordan Love took the reins from Aaron Rodgers, Matt LaFleur was finally getting an opportunity to display his full offensive game plan, and no wide receiver on the offense had more than one year of experience.

With general manager Brian Gutekunst assembling the youngest roster in NFL history, hard times were to be expected. While that turbulence did hit, it really didn't come until the end of Week 2. Green Bay opened its season against its storied and longest rival, the Chicago Bears. The Bears were once again in a spot where media members and fans hyped up the Justin Fields offense, and many had predicted them to win this game. Instead, Love put together an incredible first start this season, as he finished with 245 yards and three touchdowns. With Romeo Doubs and Aaron Jones scoring offensive touchdowns, it looked like this season was going to be relied on by players who have experience in the system. More than just offense though, Green Bay's defense did its part in this game, holding Fields to 216 yards passing and one touchdown. Quay Walker also returned an interception for a touch-down.

"I couldn't be more proud of (Love's) performance, his poise," said Packers coach Matt LaFleur. "There's a big time belief in that locker room for Jordan Love, and I think the guys are going to rally around him. They're excited for him. They love him. They respect him." While the offense and specifically the quarterback were the big story in the offseason, the defense was quietly talked about as being one of the best units in the NFL. Those projections looked true, as it held the up-and-coming Bears offense to 20 points in a Week 1 win.

Both the offense and defense carried that momentum into the Week 2 matchup against the Atlanta Falcons. Green Bay opened the game with a 24-12 lead through three quarters. The only difference in this game, though, was that rookies Jayden Reed and Dontayvion Wicks were at the forefront of the offense, scoring three combined touchdowns.

That is when the vaunted defense took a step back, however. Green Bay gave up 13 points in the final 15 minutes of the game and took its first loss of the season. On top of that, it looked like the defense had some vulnerabilities, as Falcons rookie running back Bijan Robinson gashed the Packers' defense for 124 yards on 19 carries.

While it was easy to chalk that loss up to a few mistakes from a young team that could be easily fixed, it showed two major problems for the Packers moving forward – the run defense and the offensive play calling. Now knowing what we do about Love and the offense, it seems kind of silly that he completed only 14 passes in this game.

Luckily for Green Bay, its next game was against a New Orleans Saints team that seemed to be in limbo all season long. With a mix of rookies and vets and no real identity, the Saints majorly underperformed this season.

In this game though, the Saints ripped off 17 straight points to shut Green Bay out in the first half. In what was almost a reverse of the previous game against Atlanta, Green Bay shut out the Saints in the second half, scoring 18 points (with Saints kicker Blake Grupe missing the game-winning field goal) to go up 2-1 on the season.

In the face of adversity, Green Bay was able to respond and take down a team that, at the time, appeared to have a better shot at making the playoffs than the Packers.

The underperforming play calling and first-half struggles then persisted through the next month, as Green Bay dropped four straight games.

Through the four-game losing streak, Green Bay was only able to muster nine first-half points. Instead of utilizing the middle of the field, Love's first looks were more often than not behind the line of scrimmage, as it became obvious that LaFleur wanted to get the screen game going. With Jones being hurt and A.J. Dillon's inconsistent play, those screens seemed to be a substitute for the run game. The only problem was, without exposing the middle of the field, it became really easy for opposing defenses to key on the boundaries.

"It's frustrating, man," said Love. "I'm frustrated. Everybody in that locker room is frustrated. Plain and simple, we're not winning. We're losing games, and it's games we should be winning, I think that we are right there."

A loss to the Lions during that losing streak was to be expected, but after losing to the Broncos and the Raiders in back-to-back games, it became very evident that if Green Bay wanted a shot at the playoffs, something drastic was going to need to change.

Along with the inconsistencies on offense, Green Bay was also suffering numerous back-breaking penalties. With such a young team, those penalties were to be expected and more often than not hurt Green Bay in big spots.

The offense as a whole took its biggest failure of the season in that Denver game. Just four games prior, Denver had given up 70 points to the Miami Dolphins. This really felt like a get-right game for the Packers offense, but it once again was unable to score in the first half and found itself down 16-3 midway through the third quarter. Green Bay was able to make somewhat of a comeback, as the final score landed at 19-17, but the problem with the lack of offense still existed.

While Reed and Doubs both caught touchdown passes, it was actually Dillon who led the team in receiving the game with 34 yards on two receptions.

At this point in the season, many were questioning LaFleur's ability to call a game and Love's ability to win games. Rightfully so, whether it was inexperience, injuries or poor coaching, Green Bay was underperforming and after the past few offseasons of drama surrounding Aaron Rodgers and Gutekunst, many were calling for the jobs of multiple coaches.

Now sitting at 2-5, Green Bay hosted the Minnesota Vikings with Kirk Cousins playing the best season of his career. Even though Cousins went out with an injury in this game, Green Bay as a whole continued to struggle.

Scoring its only touchdown late in the third quarter, the Packers' offense once again underperformed. While the defense had played better in previous games, it was still obvious that it was far from what the expectations were at the beginning of the year.

This game though exposed another big problem for Green Bay that reared its head in the playoffs. The Packers' last three drives of the game ended with turnovers on downs, and two of those came in the red zone. Not converting in the red zone kills teams, especially teams that are struggling on offense and looking for points in any capacity. With Love leading the team in rushing, picking up 34 yards and four carries, the noise surrounding Green Bay became louder and louder.

Green Bay was finally able to break that losing streak as the Los Angeles Rams came to town, down Matthew Stafford.

After a scoreless first quarter, Green Bay finally broke out of its slump of touchdown-less first halves and scored a three-yard Jones rushing touchdown early in the second quarter. After a Rams field goal late in the half, the Packers defense pitched a shutout the rest of the way to come away with a 20-3 victory.

Along with the win, what was encouraging about this victory was that the offense finally looked like it clicked. Love completed 20-of-26 for 228 yards and one touchdown, while Jones rushed for 73 yards and touchdown on 20 carries. What also was encouraging was that the veterans and the best players on this Packers team seemed to step up and take the game into their own hands.

Keisean Nixon had a 51-yard kick return, Jones carried the offense, and Jaire Alexander finished with seven tackles and two pass deflections. He also consistently shut down two of the best wide receivers in the game in Cooper Kupp and Puka Nacua.

As is usually the case with such young teams though, Green Bay almost immediately gave up the momentum that it had against the Steelers the next week. Pittsburgh's offense was struggling just as much as Green Bay's through the first half of the season, so it seemed like the Packers could steal a victory on the road. Once again, it was the run defense that struggled in this game, as Steelers running backs Jaylen Warren and Najee Harris combined for 183 yards and two touchdowns.

Love put together another good game, as he finished with 289 yards and two touchdowns but added two interceptions. With this loss, it pushed the team to 3-6. Despite the poor record, many in the clubhouse knew that the Packers were on the edge of winning, if only they could fix those costly mistakes.

"You can see how close we are, a play here or a play there," said Jones after the game. "I feel like we just keep pushing at it. If we keep putting in the work, it'll go in our favor."

The story of the first half for the Packers' season was inexperienced play, costly penalties and play calling from LaFleur. Instead of opening the middle of the field, LaFleur opted to try and get the outside pass game going, oftentimes electing to run bubble screens and tosses. That severely limited Love's strengths of finding open receivers between the numbers and put a stronger reliance on the rookie receivers to make the plays.

Above, Matt LaFleur's underperforming play calling and the team's first half struggles persisted through the first half of the season, as Green Bay dropped four straight games. Through the four-game losing streak, Green Bay was only able to muster nine first half points. Wide receiver Christian Watson, below, suffered injuries and dropped balls as Green Bay couldn't maintain a strong offense or defense for an entire game.

Strong second half propels Green Bay to unlikely playoff push

Love, LaFleur, Jones, provide strong answers to critics

By LUKE REIMER
GREEN & GOLD EXPRESS

While it looked like the season was going to be a wash and fans could expect to come away with a top-10 draft pick, Jordan Love, Matt LaFleur and company had different plans.

After the 3-6 start to the season, it appeared that it was only going to get more difficult for Green Bay moving forward. With the Los Angeles Chargers, Detroit Lions and Kansas City Chiefs in each of the next three games, Green Bay was going to need to find a way to subdue some of the best offenses in the NFL. That all started against the Chargers.

The Packers once again got off to a slow start, as the team was unable to put up any points in the first quarter. Following that though, Jayden Reed, who was in the midst of his breakout, sparked the offense early in the second quarter with a 32-yard rushing touchdown. With Aaron Jones injured, Reed's emergence was really a spark plug for the Green Bay offense, as he brought another rushing threat and helped to take some pressure off A.J. Dillon.

After the Chargers went up 13-10, Love connected with Christian Watson to take a lead. From there, Chargers superstar quarterback Justin Herbert connected with superstar receiver Keenan Allen to regain the lead, before Romeo Doubs found the end zone in what turned out to be the game-clinching touchdown.

While Doubs' touchdown late in the fourth quarter put Green Bay up three, it was actually a drop from Chargers rookie receiver Quinton Johnston, which would have been a walk-in touchdown, that actually won the game. With hindsight, Johnston's dropping that sure touchdown, much like Saints kicker Blake Grupe missing a game-winning field goal, proved to be the biggest play for Green Bay all season, as the Packers barely snuck into the playoffs.

From there, though, it looked like something changed in the offense. Not only was there an emergence of Reed, but other players whom the average fan may have never heard of started to stake their claim as household names.

Green Bay's next matchup came on Thanksgiving Day in Detroit, as the Packers took on the new and improved Detroit Lions. Led by Jared Goff, David Montgomery, Amon-Ra St. Brown and Sam LaPorta, the Lions were one of the highest scoring teams in the NFL. With the inconsistent play of the Green Bay Packers' defense, many Packers fans thought that this game could get out of hand quickly.

Not only did the game not get out of hand, but it was dominated by Green Bay. On the back of the newly found weapon in Reed, Green Bay scored immediately on a 10-yard pass from Love. While the Lions matched with a LaPorta touchdown, Green Bay finished the first quarter off with a nine-yard touchdown reception from Tucker Kraft and a 27-yard fumble return for a touchdown by safety Jonathan Owens. Before anyone knew it, Green Bay was up 20-6.

The defense then continued its masterclass of a game, as it held Detroit scoreless for the rest of the first half to take a 23-6 lead into halftime. Both teams added a touchdown in the third quarter and entered the fourth quarter with a 29-14 Green Bay lead. Detroit made the game close, but it came in garbage time, as Josh Reynolds found the end zone and, after

After a roller coaster of a season to begin the 2023 campaign, running back Aaron Jones would top the century mark in each of the Packers' final five games, including the postseason. In his final game of the season, he became the first 100-yard rusher against the San Francisco 49ers in 51 games. Jones is the heart and soul of this team, even in his advanced age.

Detroit Lions. The questions surrounding Love and LaFleur seemed to finally be somewhat answered, as Love tied his career high in touchdown passes with three, adding 268 yards through the air. As had been the story all season long, there wasn't just one dominant receiver, though. At this point in the season, Reed, Watson, Doubs, Luke Musgrave and Kraft all had been on the receiving ends of touchdowns.

What added to the emergence of the offense was a spark from the defense. In the two team's previous matchup, Montgomery gashed the Green Bay defense for three rushing touchdowns. In this matchup, the Iowa State alum was held to just 71 yards, and with the lack of production in the run game, Goff was under constant pressure. That started to become a theme for the defense moving forward.

Working off the momentum of upsetting both the Chargers and the Lions, the Packers faced its toughest test of the season, as the Kansas City Chiefs came to Lambeau Field. While the Chiefs were dealing with a decline on the offensive side of the ball, its defense was quietly performing as one of the best units in the NFL.

With Taylor Swift in the building, all eyes were on how Love could improve upon his previous career performance. He did not disappoint. Love finished the game with 267 passing yards and three touchdowns. Two of those touchdowns went to Watson. To continue the trend of getting everyone on the offense involved, rookie tight end Ben Sims found the end zone.

While Love continued to display his ability to be the franchise quarterback for the Packers, what was more impressive was that Green Bay never trailed in this game. Patrick Mahomes was held to just 210 yards and one touchdown, with the defense also forcing an interception. For the most part, too, Travis Kelce was held in check, as the future first ballot Hall of Famer was held to 81 yards on four receptions.

For the second game in a row, it looked like the Green Bay Packers played a full game. With the exception of a few plays here and there, all three phases of the team seemed to be at the tops of their games.

Dillon also registered a great game with 73 yards on 18 rushes, which really helped to compliment the passing attack. As for the defense, it was certainly a group effort, as Rashan Gary, Devonte Wyatt, Kenny Clark and Preston Smith all recorded half a sack, while Quay Walker and Carrington Valentine racked up 10 or more tackles, and Keisean Nixon came away with an interception.

"They're coming together," said LaFleur, after this win. "They're working. They're getting better. They're playing faster, more confident."

The play of the defense against Mahomes was kind of a microcosm of the Packers on this three-game winning streak. Everybody was playing together, while nobody was trying to do too much. It became very obvious that if Green Bay actually wanted to make a run at the playoffs that this would have to be the way to attack games. There was no Aaron Rodgers or Davante Adams to bail the team out. If it wanted to move on and build success, it would have to be as one complete unit.

While the three-game win streak was certainly fun for Packers fans, things quickly turned dark, as Green Bay dropped its next two games to the New York Giants and Tampa Bay Buccaneers. In those losses, it looked like for whatever reason the defense took a major step back.

As a whole, the Packer gave up a total of 58 points in the losses. This brought into question if defensive coordinator Joe Barry was the right man to lead this defense. Especially against the Buccaneers, there seemed to be a shift. The Packers' pass defense, which had been playing extraordinarily all year, seemed to take a step back. Now the injury to Jaire Alexander may have been a factor, but the coverage from linebackers De'Vondre Campbell and Walker had obviously been diminished.

"Now's not the time for that," said LaFleur, after being asked if the team was going to move on from Barry, showing that even through struggles, LaFleur still had faith in the team's defensive coordinator.

Sitting at 6-8 on the season, all of the momentum that Green Bay garnered over the past three weeks was all but lost. It looked like the team was heading for a top-10 pick in the draft, and much of the fan base was asking that the Packers tank the remainder of the season.

The Packers now faced a scenario where it basically needed to win the rest of its games if it even wanted a chance at making the postseason. Luckily for the team, that meant just beating the Carolina Panthers, Minnesota Vikings and Chicago Bears. With the Panthers and Bears playing as two of the worst teams in the league and Minnesota playing without Kirk Cousins, it seemed likely that Green Bay could turn its season around together.

Over the next two games, the offense got back to the form of what it was during that three-game win streak. Love and company scored 66 points and, as a whole, outscored the Panthers and Vikings by 26 points. From mediocrity to overachieving, the Packers all of a sudden found themselves in a win-and-you-are-in game, similar to the previous season. Green Bay was able to pull out the victory and reach the playoffs as the seventh seed in the NFC.

"At the beginning of the season, everybody tried counting us out," said Jones. "In the middle of the season, everybody tried to count us out. I think that speaks to a lot of the guys in this locker room, tuning out the noise and just getting to work."

With a first-round matchup against the Dallas Cowboys — who employed one of the best, if not the very best, offenses in the NFL all season long — almost nobody thought Green Bay had a fighting chance.

That didn't deter the Packers, though. In the best game of the season for the team, Green Bay came out of the gates hot and smacked Dallas in the face. Scoring early and playing fast, the Packers raced out to a 27-0 lead. At this point in the season, it really seemed like the Packers should not have been there. But because they were, they were basically playing with house money. The team was fast and loose and became the first No. 7 seed in NFL history to win a playoff game.

After beating the Cowboys in the first round of the playoffs, the Packers built upon that momentum and gave the San Francisco 49ers everything it could handle. Green Bay hung around with the best team in the NFC for the majority of the game, playing close to 58 minutes of winning football. It eventually ran out of steam though, and the Green Bay Packers' season was once again ended by the 49ers. While the loss was certainly painful, as the team was playing with as much confidence as it had all season, the season was not a disappointment by any means.

"For us to lose this game certainly stings, and I'm sure it's going to sting for a long time," said LaFleur. "But I was proud of the effort of our guys, our ability to weather some real adversity throughout the course of the season and stick together."

If anything at all, Green Bay learned that it likely had its next franchise quarterback in Love. Outside of that, it looked like there was an influx of young talent to surround Love. On top of all of that, Jones continued to come up in big moments like he has done his whole career.

The theme of the second half of the season for Green Bay was resiliency. After getting punched in the mouth to open the season, it seemed likely that a team as young as the Packers could just lay down and die. That certainly wasn't the case, though. For a team full of twenty-somethings, the fight was never lost. Everyone on the team believed in each other, and that's all LaFleur was asking for.

Receivers, tight ends prove their worth

By JACOB WESTENDORF
Green & Gold Express

The Green Bay Packers' receiving corps might be the most scrutinized position in the NFL.

Since the Packers drafted Jordan Love in the first round of the 2020 NFL Draft, one tidbit of information seems to surface.

The last time the Green Bay Packers took a wide receiver in the first round, it was Javon Walker in the 2002 iteration of the NFL Draft.

Of course, they famously passed on several receivers to take Love after playing for the NFC championship following the 2019 regular season.

Instead, the Packers have done what they usually do.

In their last two draft classes, all of their second and third round picks have been used on offense.

Christian Watson, Sean Rhyan, Luke Musgrave, Jayden Reed and Tucker Kraft all were selected each of the last two years.

All of them contributed as well.

The discourse surrounding what round each receiver was picked in was always silly to begin with. The infamous Sports Illustrated cover with Aaron Rodgers and all of his weapons from the 2011 Packers included one first round pick. That was Rodgers.

Despite that, the discourse remained this offseason, and chaos ensued when the Packers selected Lukas Van Ness in the first round instead of Ohio State's Jaxon Smith-Njigba.

More discourse emerged when the Packers did not bring in a single veteran receiver to help guide what turned out to be a historically young receiving corps.

Sammy Watkins, Allen Lazard and Randall Cobb were all on the 2022 team. None of them returned for 2023. Instead, the oldest receiver on the Packers' roster were second year guys.

Watson and Romeo Doubs were being asked to lead a receiver room full of rookies.

There was optimism surrounding both of those players. Doubs spent his offseason working out with Love and helping build chemistry that at times rivaled that of Rodgers and Jordy Nelson.

Watson shook off early season struggles as a rookie to become the team's best receiver by the end of the year.

He had a 100-yard receiving game in the team's 20-16 loss to the Detroit Lions but looked to have finally earned the trust of Rodgers as the season ended.

Watson was a touchdown machine to finish 2022 and was trying to carry that over into 2023.

Unfortunately for Watson, his body betrayed him at two specific points during the year.

Watson would miss the first three games of the season with a hamstring injury that he suffered after the preseason ended.

It took him awhile to get back on track but looked to finally start resembling the player that took the league by storm in the second half of the 2022 season.

Watson had big games against Detroit and Kansas City, including a statement 53-yard reception to open their game against the Lions on Thanksgiving Day.

He scored two touchdowns on Sunday Night Football against the Kansas City Chiefs in the team's signature victory of the 2023 season.

Unfortunately, Watson's hamstring gave out on him again, and he'd miss the rest of the regular season.

He returned for both postseason games but was limited in snaps and production.

Doubs had an up-and-down season as well. He finished tied for the team lead in touchdowns but would occasionally struggle with drops and overall ineffectiveness.

When the playoffs started, however, Doubs was Love's go-to guy.

He had more than 150 yards receiving in the team's 48-32 win over the Dallas Cowboys.

Doubs didn't have as big of a game against the San Francisco 49ers, but he was the team's leading receiver with 83 yards on the night.

Doubs and Watson both will be looking for big seasons as they enter their third year in 2024.

The biggest story from the 2023 season were the two rookies that emerged as arguably the team's two best receivers by the time the regular season ended.

Reed was the team's highest draft choice at receiver when he was picked 50th overall.

Reed was the team's best slot receiver since the days of Cobb roaming the middle of the field in his prime.

Reed had an instant connection with Love and had a speed and shiftiness that was evident from the day he stepped foot on the field.

Reed battled injuries throughout the year, but he displayed a toughness and game-breaking ability with the ball in his hands.

He led the team in receiving yards and tied with Doubs for touchdowns. In addition, he helped rewrite a record book that held the name of Sterling Sharpe in it before he got to Green Bay.

Reed is a versatile offensive chess piece that should be a big part of the offense in 2024.

The same is true for Dontayvion Wicks. Wicks and Reed are connected in that the Packers initially traded out of the 45th spot twice to get to pick 50 where they chose Reed. In the process, they acquired a draft choice that would help them select Wicks.

Wicks missed most of training camp with an injury, but it was clear he was someone the Packers liked immediately.

In the second game of the season, the Packers ran a flea-flicker to start the game. The target on the play was Wicks. They could have drawn that up for any receiver on the team but they chose Wicks.

Wicks would reward their faith down the stretch. He was always open.

He made what was perhaps play of the year in Green Bay's Wild Card win over the Cowboys. His finger tip grab after shaking Stephon Gilmore was one where his diverse skillset was on full display.

Wicks and Reed were the top two rookies, but they also got contributions from Malik Heath and Bo Melton. Melton was the team's first 100-yard receiver on the season.

The receiving corps creates a diverse set of skills. It'd be foolish to compare them to the group from 2011, but it's hard not to dream of what this group could accomplish together.

That's before we even get to the tight ends.

Musgrave and Kraft both represent the biggest investment the Packers have made at the tight end position since the picking Bubba Franks in the first round more than 20 years ago.

Musgrave and Kraft both had high moments of the season. Musgrave started immediately. He looked to be a focal point of the offense from the day he came into camp.

It took a little more time for Kraft, but by the end of the season, both guys were playing regularly.

Musgrave and Kraft's skillsets complement each other well. Musgrave can run like a deer and helps stretch the seam. He challenges defenses vertically.

Kraft is a violent blocker that can make plays after the ball is in his hands.

The Packers used a ton of two tight end sets in their dominant 48-32 win over the Dallas Cowboys in the postseason.

Matt LaFleur has never had a tight end group that did not give away their preference on offense. When Marcedes Lewis was in the game, they were predominantly a running team. When Robert Tonyan was on the field, they tended to throw more.

The truth now is, both tight ends are good enough blockers to keep the defense guessing.

Expect a lot of two tight end sets to be part of Green Bay's offense in 2024.

Despite issues, offensive line pulled together in 2023

By JACOB WESTENDORF
Green & Gold Express

Green Bay's offensive line was supposed to finally have some stability. After two seasons of battling a knee injury, David Bakhtiari was supposed to be back and better than ever. In fact, the team even had a plan in place to ensure that he'd be ready on Sundays.

Maybe the team wouldn't see him on the practice field a bunch during the year, but when the lights were on, Bakhtiari would be good to go.

"And then, like I've said, finally having an offseason of not having surgeries, the ability to let everything kind of calm down, settle in, train, put on muscle, protect the knee," Bakhtiari said. "I'm very grateful and thankful for where I'm at, and I'm just kind of excited to see what happens. Football is football. It's not the healthiest thing in the world, so we'll see when we get out there."

Bakhtiari felt good about where he was. The team felt good about everything.

They probably felt emboldened when Bakhtiari played his first game in the season opener against Chicago.

Bakhtiari looked like his usual All-Pro self.

Any defensive lineman that lined up across from Bakhtiari was shut out.

Unfortunately, that was the final game Bakhtiari would play in 2023.

Bakhtiari missed the next two games, leading to speculation that the team would not have him play on turf.

As it turned out, that speculation was erroneous. Bakhtiari was placed on injured reserve before the team's 34-20 loss to Detroit in late September.

Bakhtiari's renaissance lasted all of one game.

He gave way to a former seventh-round pick. Rasheed Walker won the job as the team's swing tackle out of training camp, where he usurped Yosh Njiman.

Of all the players on the offensive line, it's hard to imagine a player that had a tougher season than Njiman.

Yes, he was given the second-round tender in the offseason, which would ensure he was paid more than $4 million.

Njiman was likely the favorite to at least be the swing tackle, if not the right tackle.

He was in a battle with Zach Tom to be the starter at right tackle, but that was not much of a battle at all.

Tom spent one day with the starters at center, giving way for Njiman to play right tackle, but that was the only indication throughout training camp that Tom would not play right tackle.

He won that training camp battle in knockout fashion.

From there, Njiman would lose his swing tackle job to Walker and never really gained any footing as a starter. He would rotate with Walker in the middle of the season as Walker began to struggle but lost that competition as well.

By the end of the season, Njiman was no longer rotating with Walker and was relegated to spot duty.

The rest of the offensive line was a work in progress.

Early in the year, you could tell they were going through growing pains. Walker struggled. Elton Jenkins had some rust to knock off.

Josh Myers and Jon Runyan Jr. were inconsistent. Tom was brilliant but struggled with injuries early in the season.

The Packers' renaissance offensively can almost be directly attributed to the improvement of the players up front.

Green Bay's special teams squad leaves much to be desired in 2023-24

Rookie kicker at the front of criticism

By LUKE REIMER
GREEN & GOLD EXPRESS

After moving on from Maurice Drayton in 2021, the Green Bay Packers made a splash by hiring Las Vegas Raiders interim head coach Rich Bisaccia to lead special teams.

That hiring immediately paid off, as after Green Bay lost in the 2022 NFC Divisional Round to the San Francisco 49ers due in part to major special teams mistakes, the Packers' special teams unit took a major step forward.

Keisean Nixon was awarded with a First-Team All-Pro selection in 2022-23 as a kick returner after leading the NFL in return yards. Green Bay improved on blocking mistakes and coverage mistakes.

Something changed this season though. Through the first four games of the 2023-24 season, the Packers' special teams unit had racked up 10 penalties, which was by far the most in the NFL through four games. Those 10 penalties accounted for a loss of 96 yards.

Penalties at any level hurt teams, but when a team is able to start with the ball 10-15 yards ahead of where the play ends, it becomes a major problem for a defense looking to make a stop. On the other hand, giving your offense the ball backed up into your own red zone severely limits the team's ability to score points as a whole.

That comes with the philosophy of Bisaccia, though. The former Raiders coach is known for his hard, old-fashioned Kicker Anders Carlson, above, made 27 of 33 field goals with a 53-yarder against the Carolina Panthers on Dec. 24 his longest. He connected on 34 of 39 extra points. Punter Daniel Whelan, left, averaged 46.2 yards per punt in the regular season, which ranked him 25th out of 39 punters in 2023.

GREG MELLIS | GREEN & GOLD EXPRESS

style, which can account for the over-aggressiveness and penalties as a result. The penalties could also be a result of the inexperience and youth of the team. Green Bay often struggles to put players on the team who specialize in special teams. With Bisaccia on the coaching staff, that seemed to change as players like Nixon, Dallin Leavitt and Zayne Anderson became household names through special teams. Another major change that Green Bay featured this season was moving on from the franchise's all-time leading scorer in Mason Crosby.

Crosby, who had made numerous huge kicks in his tenure, was losing power in his kicks, and the team as whole decided it was best to move on. That in turn led the team to draft Auburn kicker Anders Carlson, with whom Bisaccia had familiarity after coaching his brother Daniel in Las Vegas. Even though Anders Carlson was just a 71.8% kicker in college, Gutekunst and his staff saw enough out of him to make him the next guy in Green Bay.

"He was a kicker that Rich has extensive experience with. You know, he had his brother and knew him for quite a while," said Gutekunst, after Carlson was drafted. "We felt really good about where he was headed, and again, I think the relationship there that Rich has with him is a positive factor for us picking him."

As has been the philosophy since Gutekunst and LaFleur took over in Green Bay, personal relationships seem to trump prior experience, and that appears to be the case with Carlson. In Carlson's rookie year, he converted 34 of 39 extra points and 27 field goals on 33 attempts. While those numbers aren't terrible from a rookie kicker, the inconsistency from Carlson is what was the most troubling this season. Through Green Bay's last 11 games of the season, Carlson missed a field goal or an extra point in nine of them. The most troubling came in Green Bay's divisional round matchup against the San Francisco 49ers.

With Green Bay up 21-17, Carlson was asked to enter the game on fourth down and convert a field goal to put the team up seven points. The kick missed, and the 49ers took advantage of the situation, scoring on their next drive. While it is easy to say that missing the kick was the reason that Green Bay lost, it really never comes down to one play. With that being said though, kicking is a part of the game, and teams need to take advantage of every opportunity to put points on the board.

"I don't think the kicks have been the same miss every time. So each kick is different, and as coach has talked about, each kick is its own story," said Carlson, regarding his inconsistency in games. "I think that there is a lot to learn, and as for me, it's tough to see these guys, because I know how much work they put in, and I just want to put them in the best position possible."

Due to Carlson's inconsistencies and missing in big spots, Green Bay signed Georgia free agent Jake Podlesny after the season.

That signals that even though the team spent draft capital on Carlson, it needs to see more out of him come next season. With Podlesny in town, that should be a kick in the butt for Carlson.

LaFleur finally gets a chance to showcase his offense

By LUKE REIMER
GREEN & GOLD EXPRESS

In his first season without Aaron Rodgers, Packers head coach Matt LaFleur was finally able to showcase his skills as a coach and an offensive developer.

With Jordan Love, Green Bay finally had a quarterback who seemed to use the play that was called. Not that it was the fault of Rodgers — who is considered to be one of the smartest players in the history of the league — but to have a quarterback run the called play gives the head coach a little more stability and predictability to better understand the game.

LaFleur is by no means a veteran head coach and still has a lot to learn, but now that he has a player like Love to work with, it almost seems like the two can grow and learn the game together. That should only benefit them both.

One would have to imagine that this will be a season that LaFleur is going to remember for the rest of his life. Caught in the power struggle between Rodgers and Brian Gutekunst throughout the last few seasons, LaFleur finally rid himself of the drama and was able to call the game he wanted to see.

That was a struggle to start the season, though. After a great first showing against the Chicago Bears, things quickly soured, as it seemed that LaFleur's offense was seriously limiting Love's ability on the field.

That wasn't all the fault of the coach. With an injury to Aaron Jones, LaFleur was forced to get creative. That creativity included working the boundaries of the field with slip screens and bubbles screens and not exposing the middle of the field. Once again, that severely limited Green Bay's offense and resulted in a long streak of games where the team was unable to score points in the first half.

Later, LaFleur changed and seemed to let Love and the offense off a leash. Love

Green Bay Packers coach Matt LaFleur's 2023 season was the epitome of how he described each year in the NFL — a long journey, a lot of ups and downs, trials and tribulations, a lot of adversity. But, he believed the team at the beginning of the year was not the team as at the end of the year.

GREG MELLIS | GREEN & GOLD EXPRESS

hit his stride, and with LaFleur including players like Jayden Reed, Bo Melton and Tucker Kraft, Green Bay's offense started to click. In what was supposed to be a rebuilding season, LaFleur's continued growth with Love and the offense should be a positive sign for Packer fans for years to come.

"Every year is such a long journey, and there are a lot of ups and downs, trials and tribulations throughout it, a lot of adversity," said LaFleur, in his season recap press conference. "But, I was so proud of how these guys hung and continued to fight and battle. I thought the team that we were at the beginning of the year was certainly not the team that we were at the end of the year."

To have a strong opinion on whether LaFleur is a good coach probably cannot be had yet. Rodgers did so much for the offense, so to base LaFleur's coaching prowess off basically one season would be foolish. What can be seen about LaFleur though is his leadership ability.

Throughout the season when the Packers underperformed, LaFleur was the first person to take responsibility, saying that everything starts with him. He is not one who will ever throw a player under the bus, which, as a coach, is the right move.

"What we are calling, what we are asking guys to do, you are always going to look at yourself first and be critical of yourself and make sure that you have the right plays dialed up for the guys," said LaFleur. "Making sure you have that communication where everybody is on the same page."

That is something that is very interesting about LaFleur. As what seems to be the common theme with young coaches in the NFL, there is a level of respect between the coach and the media. Unlike Bill Belichick, who more often than not is blunt with reporters and gives one-word answers, LaFleur often talks each reporter through each question to fully explain what he is thinking.

Now as any coach in the NFL, LaFleur has his moments where emotions get the best of him, and that is fair. Football is an emotional game, and after a team goes on a four-game losing streak, nobody wants to talk to the media. LaFleur is the same way, but he still faces the media to fulfill his job requirements, and as a media member, that is all you can really ask for.

A major downfall for LaFleur through his tenure has been his strong commitment to his friends.

That was most obvious with the hiring of Joe Barry for the defensive coordinator position a few years back. LaFleur has been on record saying that he struggles to coach against other coaches with whom he is friends.

Going back to his time in Washington, many of his counterparts have now found themselves in head coaching positions in the league today. Sean McVay, Kyle Shanahan, Mike McDaniels and Bobby Slowik are just a few of the names that LaFleur was with in 2013 in Washington. With those names now holding high positions in this league, LaFleur will need to figure out a way to get over his struggles coaching against his friends to continue to succeed.

To put a bow on the 2023-24 season, LaFleur talked all season about the strong resiliency that this team had. From first-half blunders to a strong push to the playoffs to a victory over the Dallas Cowboys in the Wild Card round, it seems that that message of resiliency wore off on his team.

"I was just really proud about the resiliency of the group; I have said that many times," said LaFleur. "The willingness to work and come together and continue to fight for one another — I think that is absolutely imperative."

Barry's last stand with Pack provides mixed results

Green Bay hires Boston College's Hafley after defensive coordinator's dismissal

By LUKE REIMER
GREEN & GOLD EXPRESS

Coming into the season, the story surrounding the Green Bay Packers was whether Jordan Love could be the next franchise quarterback. While that was the biggest topic of discussion, what flew under the radar was that Green Bay had put together one of the most intriguing groups of defensive players in the NFL.

A good mix of young talent with Quay Walker, Lukas Van Ness and Devonte Wyatt partnered with a strong veteran core of De'Vondre Campbell, Jaire Alexander and Kenny Clark gave many fans and writers optimism that this Packers' defense could be one of the best units in the entire league.

The most exciting player out of the bunch though had to have been Van Ness. The Packers spent major draft capital on Van Ness, making the Iowa alum a first-round pick in the 2023 NFL Draft. While a pass rusher was probably not the number one need in the draft last season, it was hard for Brian Gutekunst to pass up on such raw talent. Adding Van Ness to a passing rushing core of Rashan Gary, Preston Smith and Kingsley Enagbare had the opportunity to vault the Packers defensive line into a very formidable unit. With Gary coming off his ACL tear in the year prior, it was expected that Van Ness was going to play big minutes early.

"Big man. Powerful. Fast. Explosive," said Gutekunst, after drafting Van Ness. "Really big upside, and we were really excited to get him." As a whole in his rookie season, Van Ness finished with 32 combined tackles and four sacks. With Green Bay's approach to consistently rotate its outside linebackers, those numbers are not bad by any means, and it is certainly a bright sight for Packers fans.

As for Gary, in limited action this season, he still proved to be one of the most impactful players on the defense. Registering 44 combined tackles and leading the Packers in sacks with nine, Green Bay rewarded the Michigan product with a four-year, $107 million contract in the middle of the season.

"It is great to see somebody get paid, especially somebody that you have seen from their rookie year to now," said Smith, about his reaction to Gary's contract extension. "Seeing the progression he has made and the leaps and jumps he had, even coming back from injury and with the attitude and mindset he has, I am just always proud. I feel like I am a proud big brother. It is like watching your little brother walk across the stage and graduating to a payday."

While Clark continued his prolific career in green and gold, it was actually Wyatt who was the breakout star for the Packers' defensive line and team as a whole. Wyatt upped his stats from the 2022-23 season from 15 to 36 total tackles. His sack numbers also increased from 1.5 to 5.5.

While the defensive line and pass rushers proved to be the strongest part of the Packers' defense this season, the secondary also had quite a showing. Starting the season with Jaire Alexander, Rasul Douglas and Keisean Nixon slotted in, Joe Barry and the rest of the coaching staff was very confident about the secondary's ability to limit opposing offenses. Rightfully so, as throughout the first six games of the season, the defense did not allow more than 230 passing yards to any quarterback.

That all changed though right before the trade deadline. After starting 2-5,

Green Bay looked like it was going to be sellers at the deadline. That rang true, as when the Buffalo Bills came calling about Rasul Douglas, Gutekunst orchestrated a trade that involved moving Douglas and a 2024 fifth-round pick for a 2024 third-round pick.

Things drastically changed in the Packers secondary, as with an injury to Alexander and a continued injury to Eric Stokes, Green Bay was all of a sudden reliant on Carrington Valentine and Corey Ballentine to anchor the secondary.

More than a loss in play on the field, losing

Douglas also caused Green Bay to lose a leader in the locker room. That loss proved to play a major factor for a defense that was quickly unraveling. Even though Green Bay went on a three-game win streak, by taking down the Los Angeles Chargers, Detroit Lions and Kansas City Chiefs, there was a problem arising with Barry and the linebackers.

Even though Walker seemed to improve, there were still obvious areas for growth. While the Packers drafted Walker for his speed and ability to fly around the field, he had still yet to fully diagnose plays on the run, which certainly can and probably will improve. Adding to that, there was an obvious drop in play from Campbell. Campbell still continues to be one of the better linebackers in the NFL, but this season was a far cry from his All-Pro season in 2021. Something that surprised many though from Campbell was a cryptic tweet late in the season.

In the midst of Green Bay's playoff run, Campbell was battling injuries and sent a tweet saying, "Not going out of my way anymore and I'm not playing through injuries anymore cause when (expletive) goes wrong they always use it against you. I'm treating everyone accordingly and giving them the same energy they giving me. Focus on yourself and your mental 59 you owe it to yourself."

Whether this comment was directed at players, fans or coaches, it was obvious that Campbell was upset about how he was being treated or how he was being viewed. For a Packers fan, to see someone who was perceived as a leader say this was certainly worrisome. Even more worrisome, when asked about the tweet, Campbell refused to talk about the situation.

"I'm not talking about nothing that happened on the internet," said Campbell. "If y'all want to talk about the Panthers, we can, but I ain't answering no questions about nothing on no internet."

While these comments were alarming, Campbell did come back when needed and helped Green Bay to make the final push for its playoff run.

The inconsistencies on the defensive side of the ball quickly shifted to fans blaming Barry. When Barry was hired, many raised eyebrows, as his career stops were less than ideal. His inconsistencies were a major reason that Green Bay eventually relieved him of his duties, later hiring Boston College head coach Jeff Hafley.
