Genex sits with Wied to discuss farm bill, tariffs

Representative hopeful to have new bill passed this year

By LEE PULASKI

Concerns about the future of agriculture dominated the discussion March 7 as U.S. Rep. Tony Wied met with top officials from Genex, one of the world's great suppliers of bovine semen.

Huub te Plate, Genex's chief executive officer, presented Wied with information on the Shawano-based company and how it plays a part in growing not only the country's dairy and beef industries, but also the world's. He said there are about 4,500 member farms in the Genex cooperative, with about 100 delegates who manage the company as a whole.

With President Donald Trump's announcements about tariffs for many countries, including China, te Plate told Wied that such talk has his company concerned about future operations and distribution.

"China is a challenge," te Plate said. "They just shut down the market. We can't deliver there anymore, because the USDA (Department of Agriculture) APHIS (Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service) has some problems declaring some disease-free and low-disease statuses."

Te Plate said that APHIS has not done a recent survey of Genex's operations to confirm that the company has low instances of bluetongue, an insect-borne disease that can impact cattle, sheep and other meat animals, and that is the main cause for the issues in China. However, he clarified that even once that issue's resolved, having a tariff war with China will not help the company's bottom line.

Genex uses a lot of USDA programs in its work at home and abroad, including the Foreign Agriculture Service, according to te Plate. He noted that Genex also has a US-AID program in Africa that was impacted by Trump's sudden changes to USAID's operation.

"The tariffs, they really scare us, to say it directly," te Plate said. "We have production in Canada, for biosecurity and risk mitigation reasons, so that's going to be really tough. We don't even know if genetics are going to be part of the tariffs. They weren't four years ago, but the list of products that is is long."

Wied sits on the House Agriculture Committee and said a new farm bill is on the top of the list to get through Congress this year. The farm bill is usually updated every five or six years, but the last bill passed in 2018 and has simply been extended since.

"I'm very hopeful. I'm confident that is the No. 1 priority of the chairman, G.T. Thompson, and he talked about it the first time we met," Wied said.

He noted that his office is "getting information fast" from the Trump Administration but was hopeful that genetics would be insulated from the tariffs in the meantime as Congress tries to push through priorities

Attempted homicide case still unresolved

Bowman case rescheduled for pre-trial in May

By LEE PULASKI

The case against Amanda Bowman, a Bowler woman who stands accused of arson, attempted first-degree intentional homicide and six counts of felony bail jumping, is still unresolved, despite an offer from the Shawano-Menominee County District Attorney's Office in January.

A new pre-trial hearing was set for 10 a.m. May 21 to see whether a deal can be finalized or if the case will end up going to trial.

According to the criminal complaint, crews were called to a home in the Town of Bartelme on the morning of Aug. 17, 2024, and found it fully engulfed in flames. Shawano County Sheriff's Department Detective Craig Rekoske interviewed Bowman, who said the house belonged to her 67-year-old cousin, identified in the complaint as KID, and that she lived there on and off.

Bowman said she had been up all night driving and was running out of gas, so she stopped at her cousin's where a young friend had been repairing her ATV, the complaint said. She went into the house with the gas can when the dog started barking — "I just wanted him to know it was me," she told the detective, adding that she "didn't know why (she) brought it into the house," the complaint said.

Standing in the hallway at the door to KID's room, the gas can "just poofed in my face," and she dropped the can because of the sudden flames, she told Rekoske.

Bowman said she and her cousin ran out of the house together, jumping over the flames, the complaint said.

"I don't know if I had a cigarette; he asked me that, too, and I do not remember," the complaint quotes her as saying.

Rekoske reported that Bowman was showing "outward signs of drug usage, including the failure to maintain a stationary physical position, speaking in phrases and going from one topic to the next, and excessive hand and arm movement."

When he confronted her about her drug usage, she eventually admitted she had used meth before the fire but offered conflicting

Chicken issue has come home to roost

County won't be cooped in by zoning rules

By KEVIN PASSON
Editor-in-Chief

Shawano County is getting out of the chicken banning business. That was the consensus of the Planning, Development and Zoning Committee when it gathered March 5. Supervisor Kathy Lubke said the banning of poultry in residential areas would be officially lifted at the May meeting, after town officials present the information to their residents at annual meetings slated for April. “Our department has too many other items and short staff,” she said. “My personal feeling is to remove it (poultry) from the ordinance, and if the local municipality wants to enforce it more, that’s up to them.” The chicken issue raised its head again at the request of Angelica Town Chairman Jim Przybylski, also a county supervisor.

Chickens are technically still illegal in residential areas in Shawano County, even though county officials aren't enforcing the ban. However, county officials expect the repeal the ordinance banning residential chickens later this spring, leaving any permitting, inspections, enforcement or bans to local municipalities.

“We’ve been having conversations recently specifically in hamlets for their township, but it also applies to all residential areas,” said Kari Hopfensperger, county planner. “Your direction in November was for us not to enforce the chickens in residential areas any longer, and we were planning on amending the zoning ordinance to probably remove poultry from the definition of farm animals. We just haven’t had the opportunity to amend the ordinance yet.” Raising chickens in residential areas was discussed at last month’s town board meeting, so Przybylski sent letters to all residents in Angelica, Krakow and Zachow about the chicken rules. He explained the county’s hands-off approach taken last fall and prepared a local ordinance in case the county wiped its hands clean of the chicken ban. “I think the Town of Angelica just wants to keep the peace with the people,” he said. “We wouldn’t present (in a proposed ordinance) a yearly permit or something in that nature (including inspections).” Zachow resident Jacob Van Schyndel made his case in favor of allowing chickens. Formerly a resident of Ashwaubenon, he said there is a big home-steading movement underway with people moving away from the larger cities to smaller rural areas. “For us, having these chickens is being self-sustaining a bit (regardless of the price of eggs),” he said. “It’s a self-sustaining movement for us. We’re OK even if there was a permitted thing. We’d be willing to pay permits and fees.” “In Ashwaubenon ... we could have up to three hens permitted. Here we can’t, and we have even more room and more space.” He said he does not support free-range chickens as that can lead to traffic issues and property damage. Personally, he also made the case for his son, who has an intellectual disability. “One thing that he responds heavily to is animal husbandry,” Van Schyndel said. “For him having chickens — we’ve joined the 4-H to try to get him some experience there.” All discussions focused on hens. Roosters would presumably still be banned in residential areas.

Egg price shock could lead to alternatives

Aurora dietitian looks at Greek yogurt, other items as substitutes

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

Skyrocketing egg prices have consumers worried about whether they’ll be able to afford the breakfast staple and key ingredient in many recipes. Also of concern is how to replenish the health benefits that eggs provide. Aurora Health Care dietitian Lindsay Fencel is offering some suggestions on what alternatives people can consider for their diet. She noted that eggs are rich in Vitamin D, and it can be challenging to get that from other food sources.

“It also comes with a variety of micronutrients,” Fencel said. “Then there’s anti-inflammatory fats; Omega-3s are really helpful with brain health, joint health, trying to get rid of the inflammation from your body, etc.”

Eggs from Aldi are currently around $6 per dozen, with prices higher at other grocery locations. Aurora Health Care dietitian Lindsay Fencel says there are alternatives for those having difficulty buying eggs.

LEE PULASKI | NEW MEDIA

When it comes to the protein in eggs, there are alternatives available, according to Fencel. She recommends fatty fish like salmon, sardines or tuna as a substitute when it comes to the body’s protein requirements. “Greek yogurt and cottage cheese would also have that Vitamin D in addition to protein, but then you can go outside of those protein sources that have Vitamin D with animal sources like poultry, beef, etc., but they wouldn’t have the Vitamin D,” Fencel said.

She prefers the Greek yogurt instead of standard yogurt cups, because the standard yogurt has more sugar added in, she said. “Greek yogurt has way more protein in it than the Yoplait regular yogurt,” Fencel said. “They just don’t provide as much protein, which is the filling part of it. Even though there’s going to be sugar in lactose — that’s just going to happen — the Greek yogurt options will have less sugar in addition to significantly more protein, and that’s due to the processing they go through.” Healthy fats from eggs can be found in nuts and avocados, as well as olive oil. Fencel suggested mixing flax seed with water to develop what she called a “vegan egg.” “That’s what vegans do, because they can’t consume eggs,” Fencel said, suggesting adding the word “vegan” to online searches for recipes that show what can be added in lieu of eggs. Fencel recommends, in lieu of eggs for breakfast, Greek yogurt bowls or oatmeal with some protein powder and a spoonful of peanut butter on top. “We talk about smoothies, too,” she said. “Those are things that we can use to replace as a breakfast meal.” Fencel suggested, in lieu of boiled eggs as a snack, going with individual Greek yogurt cups, a couple of pieces of venison sausage or some string cheese. “For snacks, it’s really helpful to have a high protein source, because it helps you stay full throughout the day,” Fencel said. “A lot of people will pack two boiled eggs for a snack.” In terms of pricing, many of Fencel’s recommendations are similar in price to a dozen eggs currently, but she recommends going with the cheapest options, which are usually available at Aldi stores. Currently, the Shawano Aldi offers eggs for $5.97 a dozen with a limit of two due to the avian flu that has led to the killing of egg-laying hens in mass quantities. “Right now, everything’s comparable, but normally (eggs) would be a lot cheaper,” Fencel said. “A Greek yogurt alternative would be equal to two boiled eggs, and they’re usually $1.25. At Aldi, they can be 60 cents.”

Behnke addresses budget, other issues

Pulaski listening session sparsely attended

By WARREN BLUHM
News Editor

State Rep. Elijah Behnke's efforts to meet with his new constituents has drawn mixed results, with local listening sessions attracting as many as a dozen or more in Shawano and Cecil to just two visitors March 8 at the Pulaski library.

Behnke, now in his third two-year term in the state Assembly, moved about 2 miles to the west last year after district lines were redrawn and his home became part of the mostly urban 4th Assembly District. He won a Republican primary against former state Rep. Peter Schmidt and now serves the more rural 6th District.

The first order of business in a new term is to pass a biennial budget, he noted in a conversation with Kathy Luebke, Maple Grove town clerk and Shawano County supervisor, and her husband, Gary.

"This is the time when we reach out and listen to people and say we want to serve our communities, how can we serve our communities — obviously roads is always a big thing in rural Wisconsin," Behnke said. "Listening to people who pay my salary is kind of how I get elected."

Luebke brought a summary of Gov. Tony Evers' budget proposal provided by Wisconsin Towns Association, and she said she was concerned about a provision that would require local and state public works projects to hire contractors who pay "prevailing wage," which Evers defined as the hourly wage and benefits paid to most workers in the project's area.

"Way back, I don't know how many years ago we had to do that, and we paid dearly for roads. We usually have the local contractors do our jobs, and even for them they had to do extra paperwork," Luebke said. "Basically, prevailing wage is what the unions require, and locally we don't have union contractors."

Behnke said he expects the legislature to make significant changes in Evers' budget before passing a final bill. The omnibus tax-and-spending bill must be in place by July 1, the start of the state's fiscal year. Wisconsin currently has about a $4 billion surplus, in part because of federal dollars allocated to offset losses created by the response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

"They say if you run the numbers, if you actually were to pass this budget as it is, we'd not only run through the $4 billion left over from the COVID money but we'd be $2 billion in the hole," Behnke said.

Luebke also asked about election reform, noting that the state had a primary election last month where the only race on the ballot for most municipalities was narrowing the field of superintendent of public instruction from three candidates down to two.

"The money that it costs municipalities to hold an election for one race like that — is there some way we can condense it or just hold off until the next election?" she asked.

Behnke agreed that an overhaul of the election system is in order. He noted that someone was able to obtain an absentee ballot in his name because the requirements are so lax.

"If you know my full legal name and my date of birth, you can request my ballot," he said. "That is way too loosey-goosey."

Behnke said he likes the idea of the U.S. Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE), which was created to find ways to streamline federal government spending and eliminate waste and fraud. Wisconsin has its own version, the GOAT, or Government Oversight, Accountability and Transparency Committee, he said.

"They are starting to do open records requests for like the DOT (Department of Transportation) and Department of Corrections to see where this money goes," Behnke said.

Wisconsin government has safeguards to avoid the issues faced by the U.S. government, which has accumulated a $37 trillion debt, he said.

"If the dollar starts to become worthless because we're just printing it, and that's kind of the trajectory of what we were doing, so we have to stop the federal spending," Behnke said. "Thankfully Wisconsin I think in our constitution has — you can't go into debt like that. We can borrow some loans but not go like that."

As might be expected, Behnke said his relationship with Schmidt was "rough" after he decided to relocate and run in the 6th District, but a mutual friend arranged a meeting to work out their differences.

"We met in Shawano, had dinner together, kind of talked it all out," Behnke said. "He's keeping his campaign account open, so he will possibly run again, but I just said, 'Hey, I'm not looking to be enemies, we can work together on some things,' and he's a great resource. He does know more local people than I do."

Behnke said he and Schmidt are both younger, both farm kids and with reputations as hard workers.

Teachers spend less time in education profession

Superintendents talk about difficulties keeping teachers in schools

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

The time that teachers spend at a school or in the education profession is shrinking.

The Wisconsin Department of Public Instruction released a report that shows schools deal with ongoing challenges of keeping and fairly compensating teachers. The 2023 Educator Preparation Program and Workforce Analysis Report tracked first-time teachers and showed that only 55.6% remained in the state or in the profession after seven years, while 26.1% indicated they stayed in the same school for that period.

The numbers were lower when tracking special education teachers. About 46% of those teachers stayed in the state, and only 18.6% were at the same school.

Wittenberg-Birnamwood School District Superintendent Garrett Rogowski said it's important to create a work environment that respects teachers' training, experience and expertise. According to Rogowski, recruitment and retention efforts should be a priority to have the most qualified staff to teach the country's future workforce.

"All it takes is one visit to a classroom to see the responsibility and challenges placed upon classroom teachers," Rogowski said. "They are faced with the enormous task of positively impacting student achievement, while also supporting our students' many other needs through their unique individual challenges."

School districts' ability to pay teachers has been restricted by revenue limits, according to Nathan Hanson, Gillett School District superintendent, with many schools having to ask voters for operational referenda to compensate teachers. Hanson also recommends flexibility regarding how and what they teach.

"After Common Core first came about, we saw many districts basically handing a script to teachers and telling them exactly how they needed to do their job," Hanson said. "This limited great teachers from being able to adapt to the kids in their classrooms and created a lot of frustration with many. When we can give that flexibility back, teachers feel valued and important. Obviously there are laws that dictate some of what we have to do, but I think when we can give what we can, teachers are more likely to stay."

There is no "one size fits all" solution when it comes to retaining teachers, said Glenda Butterfield-Bolding, Bowler School District superintendent. She said she works closely with other superintendents, and they all express the desire not to steal staff from each other.

"What I've seen more recently is a desire for staff to feel connected to their districts, communities and co-workers," Butterfield-Bolding said. "Close personal relationships at work have a high correlation to staff retention, in schools and all workplaces. In Bowler, we adopted district-wide commitments to support students, families and staff in feeling connected to our school."

Those commitments, according to Butterfield-Bolding, include providing a safe and inclusive environment where expressing creativity and individuality is encouraged while respecting different of unique perspectives; cultivating a sense of belonging in the schools; being culturally inclusive; and building positive relationships.

Teachers are a school district's heartbeat, said Lena School District Superintendent Ben Pytleski, and one of the secondary effects of Act 10, which ended most public unions' collective bargaining, was giving teachers free agency.

That's a benefit for teachers in niche departments, he said, but it hinders school districts in times when there are teacher shortages.

"Supply and demand sets the market. It makes it very difficult for school districts, especially smaller ones, to get into any bidding wars as teacher salaries are open to public record," Pytleski said. "It makes it that much more important for school districts to remain competitive in the area of salaries and benefits, and it makes it that much more important to establish a great culture and working environment where teachers will enjoy working and feel supported by administrators, school boards and the community."

Uncovered Indigenous remains repatriated

Oshkosh park site of Oneota, Woodland artifacts

By ROSS BIELEMA
Correspondent

Road work at Oshkosh's Menominee Park uncovered a wealth of artifacts from the ancestors of two Indigenous tribes, including human bones that have since been repatriated back into the ground, Native American representatives and archaeologists recently revealed.

The discoveries in 2023 led to a two-year archaeology effort that unearthed earthenware and ceramic pots, stone tools including arrowheads, plates, animal bones and human remains dating back to about 870-1650 A.D., according to Jennifer Haas, director of the Archaeological Laboratory Research Center at University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

"That was the route of the Christmas lights, so I take the blame," said Haas, referring to the annual Celebration of Lights placed along Pratt Trail, a popular walking trail on the shore of Lake Winnebago, where the artifacts were found.

Although the discoveries ultimately altered the design of the road work in spring 2024 to avert the burial site, the park never closed during the scientific dig, said Oshkosh Parks Director Ray Maurer.

"The construction area encompassed Pratt Trail, and a good section of that roadway was closed down during this time," he said in an e-mail.

Oneota is the name given to Native people who lived between about 900 and 1650. No one knows for sure where they came from. They are likely the ancestors of Wisconsin Native tribes. Oneota communities mostly developed along rivers, lakes and streams. They are best known for their pottery, which uses crushed clamshell in the clay. Pots from the Late Oneota were decorated with geometric designs.

OSHKOSH PUBLIC MUSEUM

Menominee Park is located at an important site for Late Woodland and Oneota tribes dating back 12,000 years as part of a middle Fox River passageway or portage site, Haas told about 500 people Feb. 23 at the Oshkosh Convention Center "Bridging Past and Present: Exploring Native American Cultural Heritage" program. The event was sponsored by the Wisconsin Arts Board, National Endowment for the Arts, Oshkosh Seniors Center, Oshkosh Public Museum and Discover Oshkosh.

Artifacts were first found in the park area near a bath house in 1927 during sewer line work, Haas noted. Two Native American villages were uncovered. In 1993, the UW-Oshkosh Field School excavated more Late Woodland and Oneota artifacts.

The Oneota, ancestors of modern tribes who lived in villages along major lakes and rivers between 900 and 1650, used crushed clamshells in their pottery, Haas said. Their pots also had a band on top. Remnants of such pottery were found in the park.

The Woodland Indians were the first to make pottery and also domesticated plants and used earthen burial mounds, according to the Wisconsin Historical Society website. They are best known for creating effigy burial mounds in the shape of birds, mammals and people. It is likely the burial site found at the park was an effigy mound, Haas said.

attention there, Maurer noted.

"It is the preference of the tribes to not draw attention to the burial site, so no marker or fence will be installed," he said.

State law also protects any burial site or cemetery, regardless of whom is buried there.

The law also requires a 10-foot buffer between any structures or roads and a burial site, according to William Quackenbush, a tribal historic preservation officer who represented the Ho-Chunk Nation at the event.

"You're missing a beautiful story of what we have to share here," Quackenbush told the crowd. "We welcome people to come to it. We (just) don't want it to be disturbed."

"Our main purpose is to preserve the site," said David J. Grignon, historic preservation director for the Menominee Tribe.

Any burial site is considered sacred, because it is the last place his ancestors lived, and the human remains were reburied in a quiet event.

"We are the caretakers of what they have left," he said.

He related the unintentional unearthing of the bones to digging up graves at a known cemetery.

Quackenbush noted that Indians believe a person's journey continues after death, and disturbing those remains interrupts that journey. He said the repatriation was not a ceremony but simply asking Mother Earth to take the bones back.

Grignon and Quackenbush offered an extensive history of the Indigenous tribes in Wisconsin and other states. There are currently 11 federally recognized tribes living in Wisconsin, and more to be recognized soon.

"These indigenous tribes — they still exist," Quackenbush said, encouraging the crowd to just ask about Indian culture.

The seminar in Oshkosh discussed the artifacts and human remains of indigenous people unearthed at Oshkosh's Menominee Park.

Court strikes down minority scholarship program

Some CMN students have received funding

By KEVIN MURPHY
Correspondent

A state appeals court last week struck down as unconstitutional a state statute establishing a college scholarship program for minority students attending private and technical colleges.

The District II Court of Appeals opinion overturned a decision by Jefferson County Circuit Judge William Hue who had upheld the state statute challenged by the Wisconsin Institute for Law and Liberty (WILL), a conservative advocacy law firm.

The District II Court unanimously found that the statute and the Minority Undergraduate Retention Grant program violates the Equal Protection Clause of the U.S. and state constitutions.

In 1985, the Wisconsin Legislature enacted a statute establishing the program, which financially supported needy Black American, Native American and Hispanic undergraduate students enrolled in Wisconsin private colleges. The program was later broadened to include needy private and technical college undergraduates who were former citizens of Laos, Vietnam or Cambodia or whose ancestors were citizens of those countries.

The grant program is administered by the state Higher Educational Aids Board, which, with its executive secretary, are the only defendants in the suit.

The yearly grants ranged from $250 to $2,500 per eligible sophomore, junior and senior technical or private college students. In the 2021-22 school year, $819,000 was allocated for the program.

WILL filed suit in 2021 contending that the grant's racial qualification bars many otherwise deserving students and does not comply with the U.S. Supreme Court requirements imposed on other programs that give public benefits based on race.

A similar scholarship grant for Universities of Wisconsin system students was not challenged in the case.

In its appeal brief, WILL acknowledged the disparities in graduation rates among different racial groups but the list of eligible students doesn't include former residents of India or Thailand. One of the five plaintiffs is a Thai native and whose son is ineligible for the grant.

The state contended in its appeals brief that program is constitutional as it furthers diversity in higher education, a compelling public interest that the Supreme Court has recognized.

In ruling for the plaintiffs, Judge Mark Gundrum wrote: "(The statute) and the related grant program are unconstitutional on their face. In so holding, we adhere to the refocusing of the Equal Protection Clause by the (2023 U.S. Supreme Court 2023 decision in Students for Fair Admissions v. Harvard College) for the realization of the promise, ideal and hope of equal protection."

In a news release WILL attorney Dan Lenington said, "The appellate judges agreed with WILL that the state of Wisconsin can offer aid based on need, income level or personal hardships — but not race. Their comprehensive decision marks a turning point in the fight for true equality for both our state and country."

Austin Retzlaff, financial aid manager at the College of Menominee Nation, said the some of the school's approximately 300 students have received the state grant. However, losing that funding source doesn't represent a "big hurt."

"It (aid) all helps but in the scheme of things, it doesn't amount to a big hurt," Retzlaff said March 7.

The HEAB tells the college how much aid it will receive from the Minority Undergraduate Retention Grant program. Retzlaff submits names of students to the board, which determines who is eligible for the grant. The grant is then divided up between the eligible students, which Retzlaff said typically ranges between $300 and $500.

Tuition for full-time undergraduate schools at the college is $3,000 per semester, said Retzlaff.

More CMN students are assisted by the federal Pell Grant program, said Retzlaff, which can total $7,395 for the school year.

A spokesperson for the HEAB said that the board was studying the opinion and would have no further comment on it.

Congress must preserve Medicaid

Attention across the nation is rightly focused on potential massive and drastic Medicaid cuts under consideration by Congress that would imperil health care for nearly 80 million of our most vulnerable neighbors — low-income families, expectant moms, children and senior citizens, as well as individuals with disabilities.

Rural hospitals caring for communities in America's heartland — which are already struggling — will be further devastated by these cuts, making access to quality health care another unobtainable element of the American Dream.

The 13 hospitals that make up Hospital Sisters Health System serve small communities throughout Central and Southern Illinois and Northeastern Wisconsin. The populations in these towns often reflect higher reliance on Medicaid, especially among children. According to the McCourt School of Public Policy at Georgetown University, 25% of children in Macon County, Illinois, home to HSHS St. Mary's Hospital, rely on Medicaid. In Brown County, Wisconsin, home to HSHS St. Mary's Hospital Medical Center and St. Vincent Hospital in Green Bay, nearly 32% of children rely on Medicaid.

As representatives of nonprofit, Catholic health care, HSHS views health care as a basic right.

For us, health care service is more than an occupation — it is a vocation. We treat every patient with the same love and compassion St. Francis showed to lepers banished to live outside medieval city walls.

Medicaid — along with Medicare — was created in that same spirit in 1965, with President Lyndon Johnson noting the new health insurance program jointly funded by the federal and state governments reflected an American tradition, directing us: "never to ignore or to spurn those who suffer untended in a land that is bursting with abundance."

Who among us has not been vulnerable at some point in their life, or knows a relative, friend or neighbor who has? Public opinion polls bear out this sentiment, with the nonprofit health policy research group Kaiser Family Foundation (KFF) reporting two-thirds of U.S. adults have some connection to Medicaid. Additionally, more than three-fourths hold a favorable view of the program.

The human toll of these cuts would be unconscionable, and the economic impact devastating. KFF estimates state governments could shoulder additional Medicaid costs of $1 trillion over the next decade if the federal government caps its contribution per enrollee and withdraws its 90% match to states that expanded Medicaid under the Affordable Care Act.

Damond Boatwright

We support the dignity of work, yet potential work requirements for Medicaid participants appear counterproductive, since KFF research shows nearly two-thirds of Medicaid adults are already working, usually at low-paying jobs that either don't offer insurance or do so at unaffordable rates.

The overall result of these proposed changes: States would be forced to dramatically scale back their Medicaid programs, hurting enrollees and impacting practically every hospital across the country — including those HSHS operates. Medicaid accounts for 24% of inpatient admissions in Illinois hospitals, according to the Illinois Health and Hospital Association, while the program makes up 14.5% of total gross patient revenue in Wisconsin hospitals, according to the Wisconsin Hospital Association.

Hospitals across the U.S. are still grappling with COVID-19 fallout, facing workforce shortages and shrunken margins. As a nonprofit system, HSHS is not profit driven. Yet we must operate on some measure of solid financial footing to carry out the legacy of our founding and current Hospital Sisters.

Our sisters founded four of our Illinois hospitals 150 years ago this year, and within days of their arrival from Germany were knocking on doors, seeking donations. We keep that drumbeat alive today, but we cannot continue our mission on contributions alone.

We urge Congress to maintain federal funding commitments for the Medicaid program to prevent structural changes that would rob coverage from those in need. Our federal lawmakers must remember their mission in representing all constituents for the common good.

Damond Boatwright is president and chief executive officer for the Hospital Sisters Health System, which operates hospitals like St. Clare Memorial Hospital in Oconto Falls.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Birthright citizenship a constitutional precedent

To the editor:

We are writing to express our strong opposition to President Donald Trump's executive order seeking to end birthright citizenship. This unilateral action is not only unconstitutional but also fundamentally un-American, violating the principles of equality and justice enshrined in the 14th Amendment.

We are thankful for the four federal judges who have currently blocked this order citing the 14th Amendment and a long-standing Supreme Court precedent. It is our understanding that the Trump Administration intends to appeal these rulings. We presume that this matter, along with other current overreaching executive actions, will one day arrive at our nation's Supreme Court.

The constitution's citizenship clause clearly states that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States." This principle has been upheld for over a century, ensuring that children born on American soil — regardless of their parents' immigration status — are full citizens. Efforts to overturn this right through executive order directly contradicts established constitutional law.

If changes to citizenship policy are to be considered, they must be addressed through the democratic process and not dictated by executive order. This proposed order is a dangerous overreach of executive power and must be rejected by both lawmakers and the American people.

We hope citizens will stand against this unconstitutional attack on birthright citizenship and support policies that uphold our nation's core values of fairness, inclusion and justice.

Hollywood films impact mental health

A suicide devastates more than one life.

I learned that lesson shortly after my doorbell rang at 2:30 a.m. Sept. 10, 2016. My 20-year-old son, Austin, had died by suicide. After decades reciprocating his infectious smile and admiring his achievements on the football field and in the classroom, I had to digest in an instant that I would never see him again.

Every single day, I wish I could go back and talk with him one more time. Would it have helped? I'll never know. I do know, seven years into my journey as a suicide prevention advocate, that severe mental illness doesn't manifest in a vacuum, especially for young adults.

Whether we're aware of it or not, the media we consume strongly influences how we process mental health crises.

The folks who shape our culture have never been more aware of the mental health challenges Americans face. But they largely haven't responded to that awareness by depicting mental health more responsibly.

Leslie Weirich

Over the last two decades, the suicide rate among those aged 10 to 24 has risen nearly 60%. The factors behind this crisis are complex and multifaceted, but researchers are coming to understand that Hollywood plays a role. Many shows have inadvertently contributed to the increase in the youth suicide rate by glorifying suicide and the mental health conditions that cause it.

Consider "13 Reasons Why," a show developed for Netflix that depicts the story of a teenage girl who takes her own life and leaves behind a series of audiotapes that implicate the people she holds responsible for her death. Just one month after the show aired, the suicide rate among 10- to 17-year-olds increased nearly 30%. The series was intended to start a meaningful dialogue about bullying, sexual assault and suicide. It instead portrayed the main character's choice as a means of exacting emotional revenge on those who wronged her.

Some teens with existing mental health issues are more susceptible to emulate suicides that are glamorized — a well-documented phenomenon called "suicide contagion."

While "13 Reasons Why" has exacerbated some awful mental health trends in America, it's hardly the only one. Fortunately, other shows and movies do just the opposite.

The critically acclaimed film "Silver Linings Playbook" has been praised for its realistic depiction of people living with bipolar disorder. Consider "Adieu," a movie currently in production that centers on a prodigal violinist struggling with depression after her sister's suicide. Several leading mental health professionals have commended "Adieu" for depicting grief, depression and the value of human connection in an authentic way — allowing viewers to see the possibility for recovery and growth even after a tragic loss.

Stories like these are crucial because they tap into what some experts call the "neuroscience of hope." These scientists hypothesize that optimism stems from distinct neurological processes that are subject to outside influence. As a result, certain forms of art could literally rewire the brain to generate feelings of hope that combat mental illness.

By creating powerful art that more appropriately considers and depicts mental health challenges, Hollywood could use its great power more responsibly.

Leslie Weirich is a nationally renowned suicide prevention speaker and author who advocates for youth mental health.

The first climate comic created by the College of Menominee Nation's Sustainable Development Institute focuses on the emerald ash borer, an invasive species that is laying waste to ash trees across northern Wisconsin. Ash trees are essential for the Menominee basket weavers to make their creations.

SDI using art form to drive home environmental science

College's new comic series will take a look at climate change

By LEE PULASKI
City Editor

Comics have entertained and informed for decades, but the College of Menominee Nation's Sustainable Development Institute hopes that its foray into the artistic side of things will help to not only educate people on the sustainability of the environment but also serve as a tool to help revive the Menominee language.

"We're really happy to bring this idea and have it in print," said Jennifer Gauthier, SDI director and one of four people involved with developing the climate comic series. "You can touch it and feel it and read it. What we wanted to do is take some of the science that we're doing and start sharing with the community."

The comics are being created on a monthly basis and will be in print in the tribal newspaper Menominee Nation News, as well as on the Indigenous Climate Resilience Network's website, www.icrn.us.

The first comic, which debuted at a kickoff event March 3 at the college, features two birds common to the Menominee forests, the woodpecker and the sapsucker, and they both talk about a new visitor — the emerald ash borer. Over the course of the six panels, it is learned that, without the ash trees that are being destroyed by the invasive insect, it impacts the Menominee people's abilities to make kahkopenakanan, translated as baskets, as well as limits where the birds can live. With winters becoming warmer in the Midwest, the borer has more time to spread to ash trees in the area and kill them.

"We're starting to see changes, and that's what we wanted to share and focus and make sure that everyone is aware," Gauthier said. "This was our first time creating something like this, so we kind of went back and forth — 'Let's do this,' 'Let's try that.' We have a good process going now where we want to get out one of these to you every month."

Besides Gauthier, the climate comics came into being with the help of Nicholas Schwitzer, SDI's media expert, along with tribal resilience liaisons Sara Smith and Allison Scott.

"What I brought to the team was the Menominee language, the cultural aspects," Gauthier said.

Smith and Scott noted they bring a lot of the scientific information to the project, while Schwitzer's contribution was the drawing and coloring itself. Scott pointed out that a lot of scientists were consulted in developing the comics.

"We really were hoping that maybe this could be an opportunity for more place-based and culturally grounded communications to talk about climate change and impacts of the Native experience in the Menominee community," Scott said. "This could be a model that other tribes throughout our region and the country could look to talk about climate change in their communities."

Included with each comic will be a language box, which shows what the Menominee words mean. Gauthier noted the first comic's final panel was interesting in that it showcased the intergenerational information passed down from the grandmother to the grandchild.

"This was intentional, because we

Billie Frechette completes John Dillinger's story

The story ran just inches below the Shawano Evening Leader masthead. On Jan. 31, 1936, the paper's faithful learned that Evelyn "Billie" Frechette, the "erst-while sweetheart" of slain gangster John Dillinger, "stepped from the train at the depot at Shawano last night at 12:40 and was met with friends who took her immediately to the reservation."

Frechette was newly paroled and heading home to her Menominee community after spending two years in the federal prison in Milan, Michigan. Described by the reporter as being "smartly dressed and wearing smoked glasses," Frechette stated, "It's good to be free ... And I'm going to be good. The federal men said they'd send me back to prison if I don't act like a lady."

Immortalized as the lover of the very first "Public Enemy Number 1," Frechette's story helps everyone better understand the choices made during this tumultuous period in American history. The fact that she is a member of the Menominee Nation further reveals a rich local connection to national history.

Acclaimed crime historian John Oller's latest book endeavors to humanize the effort to thwart crime sprees in 1930s America. "Gangster Hunters: How Hoover's G-Men Vanquished America's Deadliest Public Enemies" shares the stories of the men who brought law and order to national criminals. By illuminating the machinations of their lives and livelihoods, Oller enriches narratives about bullets and bank robbers with details of love, loss, sacrifice and persistence.

Specifics about kidnappings, robberies, jailbreaks and car thefts help paint a more complete picture of some of the decade's most nefarious undertakings, but where Oller's work most resonates is in the passages discussing lovers, spouses and descendants of those involved in the melee.

Oller describes Frechette as "the five-foot-two raven-haired beauty of the bunch" who met Dillinger "in a Chicago nightclub where Billie worked as a hat-check girl" in November 1933.

Frechette, then an estranged wife of Falling in love with logs leads to commitment

If it's March, Holt and Balcom Logging Camp Museum in Lakewood is preparing for another year. As director, I'll be meeting with curator Bob Brown and camp manager Dave Zuleger to plan our 2025 season, which includes field trips where hundreds of area fourth graders come for a hands-on experience in Wisconsin logging history. Many return with their families for our Summer Saturday tours which are open to the public.

Holt and Balcom is a historic treasure. Unfortunately, it seems to also be one of the area's best kept secrets. While people from almost every state and several foreign countries have visited, lots of folks who've lived in the area their entire lives have never been inside. Too bad. They're missing something really special.

Truth be told, when Jon and I moved to

Kathleen Marsh
Columnist

Townsend, we were among the uninformed. Then our neighbor, Lee Stehula, was elected chairman of the McCaslin Lions Club Logging Camp Committee. At the time, the Lions owned and operated the camp. When Lee asked Jon to help with the school tours, he agreed but was concerned that he had limited experience in logging camp history and even less in working with kids.

I was glad that I encouraged Jon to go, because when he got home, he said it was way more fun than he expected. He kept volunteering and became a popular guide with a wealth of acquired knowledge. One day when they were short on staff, he suggested I tag along. I was immediately smitten and fell head over heels in love with the camp. That surprised me; I'm from Dairy Cow Country, not White Pine Land.

That turned out to be the first day of a rest-of-my-life adventure. I started checking out books on the history of logging, which led to imagining what life was like in northern Oconto County back then. I did extensive in-depth research, personal interviews and spent a decade documenting the history of Townsend.

I began having recurrent dreams in which I starred as a lumberjack's sassy saloon lady. A totally unexpected outcome of that was writing and producing role-plays in which I impersonated Lucy Holt, plus five Red Light Saloon Musical Comedies where those saloon girl dreams came to life on stage.

I clearly remember the evening Jon ran into the then-logging camp manager, Norb Langer, at Sunset Resort. He said Norb wanted me to call him. When I did, Norb asked if I could send an article to local newspapers explaining that the camp's very existence was in danger. The Lions had lost interest and sold it back to the Oconto County Historical Society for $1. He was horrified that there was talk it would be dismantled, transported and reassembled in Laona.

Amazing what one simple little, "Sure, I can do that," can lead to, isn't it? Yet here I am, beginning my third decade as Holt and Balcom Logging Camp director.

Now if you've spent any time in the Northwoods, you know there are still a few logging camps around, though the vast majority were demolished, burned down or rotted away. If you've never visited Camp Five in Laona, the Logging Museum in Wabeno or the Homesteader's Cabin in Mountain, put them on your to-do list and just go already. But please start at Holt and Balcom.

Why? People seem to put special value on whatever ends in est — youngest, smartest, finest, highest, strongest, prettiest — you get the picture. The overarching importance of Holt and Balcom is that it is the oldest logging camp in America sitting on the exact spot where it was built in 1881. As is fitting, it is an unsurpassed representation of lumberjack life in a late 19th to early 20th century logging camp.

In 2005, I stepped up to lead an effort to raise money to save the camp, which was basically disintegrating. Then the recession hit, and fundraising got incredibly tough. There were times I wanted to give up. Jon would say, "I wonder what camp will now claim to be the oldest?" My response was to get back to work.

If I'd known then what I know now, there's a good chance I would not have raised my hand to help. Once I commit, I'm all in. Jon says I'm too stubborn to quit. He's right again, and I'm sick of it. All kidding aside, it's my exasperatingly competitive streak that does me in, overruling all latent defeatist tendencies. Sure, I volunteered in blissful ignorance, thinking it wouldn't take much time. Wrong. It's been decades, and I'm still deeply committed. As long as the museum's still there, and I'm still here, I'll keep working to get the job done.

Kathleen Marsh is a lifelong educator, writer, and community advocate. She has published eight books, four on the history of Townsend, where she and husband Jon are happily retired on the beautiful Townsend Flowage.

a man serving prison time, is quoted as saying about her new beau, "There was something in those eyes that I will never forget. They were piecing and electric; yet there was an amused carefree twinkle in them, too."

The couple were enamored with each other, traveling the country and spending stolen dollars despite lawmen's fruitless pursuits. Incredibly, "a hick town police force" in Tucson, Arizona, managed to arrest Frechette alongside of her murderous paramour in January 1934. She gave a false name and was released to travel back to Chicago.

Dillinger was extradited to Indiana to face murder charges, but on March 3, he escaped using what he claimed was "a wooden pistol that he used to bluff his jailers." While Oller recounts details of unproven theories about bribes and accomplices, what's known for sure is "a woman visitor ... might have fed Dillinger details about the breakout plan, since they communicated in code."

Led to believe that the woman's name was "Ann Martin," the FBI later

"ascertained that her real name was something like 'Fancette' or 'Fraschetti' and, finally, Frechette." Oller notes Frechette "practically leaped into his arms" when she and the escaped Dillinger were reunited.

Later that month, Dillinger was wounded in a shootout with law enforcement in St. Paul, and it was Frechette who transported him to a moonlighting doctor in Minneapolis.

On April 9, the life of lawlessness ended for Frechette. She was arrested in Chicago while serving in "the moll's customary role of advance woman." Dillinger escaped "reportedly weeping, knowing the loyal lover he was planning to marry" was apprehended by the FBI.

In June, Frechette was convicted in St. Paul for harboring Dillinger. The following month, Dillinger was killed by federal law enforcement in Chicago.

After leaving prison, Frechette shared the story of her rendezvous with criminals to reporters. Later, she toured with members of Dillinger's family in a theatrical show titled "Crime Doesn't Pay," dutifully upholding her promise to "act like a lady" while perpetuating the allure surrounding Dillinger's life.

From a humble birth in Neopit, to attending a mission school in South Dakota, to participating in some of the most flummoxing days in FBI history, Frechette lived quite the life before retiring to Shawano. She remarried twice before eventually succumbing to cancer in 1969. Interred in the Woodland Cemetery under a headstone reading "Evelyn Tic," Frechette will forever be linked to the notorious outlaw who had a "carefree twinkle" in his eyes.

Newspapers of yesteryear carry some of the details of Dillinger's illicit crimes, but texts like Oller's prove that the man's infamy cannot be understood without recognizing the role Billie Frechette played in maintaining it.

Ryan Winn, Ph.D., teaches communications, English, history and theater at the College of Menominee Nation. Visit www.menominee.edu for more information about the school.

wanted to give people some language to the imagery that we're seeing," Gauthier said. "This is something that we will include in every single one of our comic strips, and we're hoping that, by the end of the year, we have a little glossary of seasonal terms."

Smith noted that there are signs that the emerald ash borer has taken hold in the area, and showing how it's impacting the Menominee and their cultural aspects is a way to explain why climate change and invasive species are such important issues.

"A lot of times, cold weather can hold off invasive species spreading in the region like the emerald ash borer," Smith said. "Temperatures are warming everywhere, but here, the Midwest winters are warming up the fastest. There are a lot of times that we get rain in the wintertime; we didn't used to have that back in the day. These changes that we're seeing is going to impact the emerald ash borer, and it's making it easier to come into our region."

Gauthier noted that the first comic went through a lot of drafting sessions, but the team enjoyed having the sapsucker and woodpecker talk so much about the environment that the pair are already being worked into the second comic, which should come out around the end of March or the beginning of April.

"We realized that we liked the wisdom of sapsucker and woodpecker, so they will likely be making appearances in all the comics," Gauthier said.

Storytelling is important to the Menominee people, Gauthier said, and using modern techniques like comics can help that cultural knowledge to be spread and preserved. Topics for upcoming comics include snowshoe hares, sugar maple, lake sturgeon, moose and wild rice.

GARDENING WITH MELINDA MYERS

Garden longer with less muscle strain, fatigue

That first full day in the garden may find you tired, sunburned and stiff. Whether you are a young or young-at-heart gardener, include some strategies to help extend your enjoyment and reduce fatigue and muscle strain so you can keep gardening longer each day and for years to come.

No matter your age, it's important to protect your joints when gardening. Use a kneeler pad or knee pads to protect your knees. Knee pads secured to your legs allow you to conveniently and comfortably protect your knees as you move from one garden bed to another.

If you need help kneeling, consider a garden kneeler with handles. The handles provide needed support when kneeling and standing up. The ones that can be flipped over and used as a garden bench provide double the benefit. The seating position reduces bending and helps minimize the need to kneel.

Elevating your garden can also help. It is a great way to save space and eliminate the need to bend when planting, weeding and harvesting. Elevated gardens and raised beds also offer a place to garden where planting space is limited or nonexistent. You'll enjoy planting and harvesting with minimal weeding needed. Just be sure to monitor soil moisture and water as needed. Use self-watering containers, add irrigation or employ water-extending products to help lengthen the time between watering.

Further expand planting options by dressing up walls, fences and more with vertical gardens. Monitor soil moisture in wall-mounted gardens regularly as many have limited soil that dries out quickly.

Clean and sharpen your tools, including pruning equipment, digging and weeding tools. This allows you to make cuts more easily and dig into the soil and weed with less effort.

Consider investing in Kneeler pads provide comfort and protection for knees.

MELINDAMYERS.COM

ergonomic tools designed for comfort to help prolong your time in the garden. Select lightweight tools with non-slip comfortable grip handles aligned to keep your wrist extension straight, which helps reduce muscle strain.

Use pruners with ratcheting, compound or

Dual Link action for more cutting power with less effort. You'll be able to spend more time pruning with less muscle strain and fatigue. Consider investing in shovels with an anti-skid plate above the blade, providing more foot support for more digging power. Retrofit an existing shovel with a com-mercially available anti-skid foot plate.

Don't overlook the importance of protecting your hands as well when gardening. Quality gardening gloves provide support and protection when digging, planting, pruning and more.

Start with some pre-season training. Every gardener knows gardening is a workout and often involves different motions and muscles than other exercises. Always warm up your muscles and do a bit of stretching before getting out in the garden.

Enlist the help of wheeled carts and wagons to move plants, mulch, soil and other heavy loads. Don't be afraid to break heavy loads into smaller batches or ask for help. You'll spare your muscles and probably save time in the long run.

Wear a pair of safety glasses to protect your eyes, and don't forget the sunscreen. Take frequent breaks and drink plenty of water.

Preseason planning and preparation can help reduce muscle strain as the garden season begins. You'll boost your enjoyment and be able to garden longer.

Melinda Myers has written over 20 gardening books, including "Midwest Gardener's Handbook," "Revised Edition" and "Small Space Gardening." She hosts The Great Courses "How to Grow Anything" instant video and DVD series and the nationally syndicated Melinda's Garden Moment radio program. Myers is a columnist and contributing editor for Birds and Blooms magazine. Myers' website is www.melindamyers.com.

ThedaCare encourages protection against measles

Area counties have vaccination rate between 70-80%

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recently issued a health advisory in response to rising measles cases in the U.S. As of Feb. 27, a total of 164 measles cases were reported by nine jurisdictions.

The U.S. recently recorded its first measles death in a decade. The pediatric death occurred in Texas and marks the state's largest measles outbreak in 30 years. Measles is one of the most contagious airborne diseases, despite the existence of a highly effective vaccine. The infection was declared eliminated in the United States in 2000, meaning for a year there was no continuous transmission of the disease. Measles infection rates have since climbed as, among other factors, vaccination rates among children have dropped below the CDC's 95% target, a threshold for herd immunity. Health care experts in northeast and central Wisconsin are watching for signs of the infection in patients. Nathan Nobbe, ThedaCare's director of infection prevention-north region, is concerned about the outbreak, as well as declining measles immunization rates among children. "As an organization dedicated to improving community health, ThedaCare continues to encourage vaccination against measles and other similarly communicable diseases," he said. "Immunization is the simplest course of action we can take to prevent or at least significantly slow the spread of infections like measles." Measles is an extremely infectious and potentially severe rash illness. The virus lives in the nose and throat mucus of an infected person. It can spread to others through coughing and sneezing. The virus can live for up to two hours in the air. According to the CDC, measles is so contagious that if one person has it, up to 90% of the people close to that person will also become infected if not already immune. Measles can cause serious health issues, especially in children younger than 5. "An estimated, one in five children diagnosed with measles will end up hospitalized," Nobbe said. "In the most severe cases, a measles infection can lead to pneumonia, brain swelling, blindness and death. This is a virulent infection to be taken seriously." Symptoms usually begin seven to 14 days after becoming infected. Most common symptoms include a high fever that may spike to more than 104 degrees; cough; runny nose; red rash that breaks out, head to toe; small raised white spots on top of the red rash; red, watery eyes (conjunctivitis); and white spots that may appear inside the mouth. "Measles is caused by a virus, so there's no antibiotic or specific medical treatment for it. The virus simply has to run its course," Nobbe said. "An infected child should stay hydrated, get lots of rest and stay home. It's also strongly advised that a child or an adult with measles should avoid groups or gatherings to help curb the spread." Protection from measles infection begins with immunization, health organizations nationwide have said. For most children, measles protection is part of the measles-mumps-rubella vaccine or measles-mumps-rubella-varicella vaccine given when they're 12-15 months old and again when they're 4-6 years old. The first vaccine can be given to babies as young as six months old if they will be traveling internationally. "About 95% of people achieve immunity with their first vaccine, and the rest develop immunity the second time they're vaccinated," Nobbe said. "Immunity usually lasts a lifetime." Nobbe echoed the CDC's stance that declining measles vaccination rates among children are allowing the disease a new foothold. The CDC targets a 95% MMR vaccination rate among kindergarten children, an amount the nation reached during the 2019-20 school year. The following year the rate slipped to 94%. During the 2022-23 school year, it was 93%. In some Wisconsin counties, the numbers are even lower, according to the Wisconsin Department of Health Services. In Oconto County, the vaccination rate is 79%, while Menominee County sits at 75% and Shawano County 71%. "The current measles outbreak is another reminder for area parents and families to make sure they and their children are up to date on recommended immunizations," Nobbe said. "We cannot stress this enough – vaccination is the most effective preventative strategy in avoiding the measles. As always, connect with your health care provider if you have questions or concerns about measles or other infectious illnesses."

It was the third state appearance in a row for the Ice Bears and fifth overall, albeit with a different host school.

In addition to the Bay Area Ice Bears' state titles in 2014 and 2023, they finished as runner-up in 2017.

Another configuration of the co-op, without Pulaski, also placed runner-up in 2010.

March 6
Bay Area 4
Cap City Cougars 0

The Bay Area Ice Bears return to the girls hockey state championship game with a 4-0 shutout of the Cap City Cougars. And, they will face off against Central Wisconsin Storm, the team that beat them last year for the state title.

The Ice Bears first got on the board at 5:22 in the first period with a goal from Aisling Buchan with assists from Lily Lyons and Elizabeth Zunker. Ava McDonald scored at 9:25 to put Bay Area up 2-0.

A scoring drought lasted throughout the second period and ended with Lyons scoring at 7:58 in the third period; Buchan assisted. The final goal came at 11:31 by Faye Brunke with assists from Julianne Bradford and Emily Bill.

Bay Area had 37 shots on goal compared to only nine for Cap City. Reese Spiering had all nine saves.

Each team was penalized three times for six minutes.

Central Wisconsin Storm advanced to the championship game with a 4-3 overtime win over Eau Claire Area.

Shawano youth hockey teams compete at state tournament

By KEVIN PASSON
Editor-in-Chief

Shawano's PeeWee A and B teams competed at the state tournament this past weekend, with one team placing sixth and the other eighth.

The PeeWee A team lost its first game 8-0, then won 6-1 before losing its third game 12-6 to finish in sixth place.

The PeeWee B team placed eighth after losing 14-0, losing 5-4 in double overtime and falling in the third game 10-5.

On the first weekend in March, one of the Squirt teams made it to that division's state tournament.

The team went into the tournament ranked eighth out of eight teams. They were competitive in every game despite losing 3-0, 3-1, 2-1.

The Shawano Hockey League (Youth League) is comprised of players ages 4-14. Divisions are Mites (Ages 4-8), Squirts (Ages 9-10), PeeWees (Ages 11-12) and Bantams (Ages 13-14). After that, players continue to play for the Shawano/Bonduel Hawks high school team until they graduate.

"Between our youth program and high school players, our program serves 130 players approximately," said Adam

Gafner, head coach and league president.

This season, the league featured five Mite teams, two Squirt teams, two Pee-Wee teams and the high school squad.

Of the four teams eligible to make the state tournament this season (the Squirt and PeeWee teams), three made it for the second time in the program's history, which began Jan. 7, 1997.

To win the title would put the team in rare company.

"I believe there may have been a state champion a long time ago; it's been over 20 years for sure," Gafner said. "But it's only happened once."

Gafner said the message to the players was simple.

"We've already had a good season, one when we look back at it to be proud of," he said. "But do you want to be good or great?"

All teams received a police and fire escort out of the city on their way to the state tournaments.

"My final message for the kids last night was to be 'all in' this week with everything they have. Truly committed. This league has been supported by this community for almost 30 years," Gafner said.

Shawano was down by 16 at halftime and fought back to get within six points with a minute left. Sparta was able to make their free throws at the end and end the season for the Hawks.

WIAA board OKs football qualifying, seeding changes

8-player football tournament bracket expands to 32 teams

The Wisconsin Interscholastic Athletic Association (WIAA) board of control approved recommendations by the fall coaches' advisory committees, including a plan that replaces the 11-player and 8-player football playoff qualifying and seeding system.

The board voted at its February meeting to support the plan created by the Wisconsin Football Coaches Association.

Prior to the 2025 season, teams will be divided equally in seven divisions based on enrollment and application of the performance factor for 11-player football programs. Teams will qualify and be seeded for 11-player and 8-player football according to a ranking point system.

Programs earn points for each win based on the division of their opponents (Tier 1) of all games. In addition, teams will be rewarded points for each Tier 1 victory of their defeated opponents for all games played (Tier 2). The sum of each tier is divided by the total number of games played. The total points calculated for each tier is added to determine a team's total point value for ranking within its own division.

The four teams with the highest total points in each division are designated the top seeds in the four groupings. Subsequent seeded teams will be added to the groupings in each division based on the nearest expected travel to higher-seeded teams. A detailed summary of the playoff qualification and seeding plan is available on the NEW Media website at www.newmedia-wi.com.

Another football coaches' recommendation receiving board approval expands the 8-player football tournament bracket to 32 teams in 2025. The 8-player season will begin the same week as 11-player football to accommodate for the added round of the playoffs.

Dinosaurs, another world make for adventure

“Stranded” was the first in Shawn Inmon’s Lost Eden adventure series.

Ben and Barney Pepper have always been close though their personalities are polar opposites. When Barney begs Ben to join him on “the adventure of a lifetime,” Ben can’t say no. Ben learns that the

Animus Corporation has discovered a space portal leading to a place they’ve named Lost Eden. As Barney shows him the remains of creatures who have come through the portal, Ben notes how much they look like Earth dinosaurs. Animus has readied a team to go through the portal, explore and report back. The portal opens for only minutes every 17 days.

Lost Eden has less gravity than earth, and the climate is hot and humid. Beyond that, they know very little. The team is made up of diverse individuals with overlapping skills. Spade, Gord, Dr. Zell, MacDonald, Cranston and ex-military Cooper, Yang, Wagaman, Menendez and Stone, plus Barney, Ben and Animus employee Hansen Teller round out the group. Before they know it, they, and several crates of supplies, step through the portal into complete darkness. To their horror, the portal opens high above a large lake. Everyone survives the initial splash down, but within minutes a massive water creature attacks Dr. Zell. The remaining 11 make it to shore, but their back-up medic is quickly torn apart by a panther-like creature. The team regroups and moves away from the lake to discuss how to retrieve the precious crates and plan how to reach the portal when it opens.

The group manages to find suitable shelter but must endure giant ants, massive spiders, pterodactyl-type creatures, a wide array of dinosaur-like beasts and extremely painful acid rain. The only non-team player is Teller. He spends most of his time entering “reports” into his computer. As Ben moves about Lost Eden, he sees the delicate balance of life there. He soon suspects that Teller is planning to exploit Eden’s resources. It doesn’t take them long to find a suitable cave for shelter, but it contains some curious marks on the walls. While recovering from a bug attack, Spade “dreams” about a stone key that opens to a hidden lower level. To their amazement, the key is there and they explore what would have been a home for humanoid residents. That, combined with the remains of an orange monk’s robe, convince them that someone has been here before. Much adventure and intrigue ensues, along with often dangerous encounters with the creatures and other inhabitants of Lost Eden, setting up the second part of what appears to be a trilogy.

For Voting As The BEST Real Estate Company
In The Wittenberg-Birnamwood Area!

Smart Move Realty is a company with 6 agents ready to help you statewide. I have been a part of Wittenberg for over 30 years and I also was a Secretary to the Director of Homme Home and so I got to know many, many people and I got to help many people with their selling and buying. We do the reduced commission rate to help YOU get your property sold and you still walk away happy. The same with buyers! We will show as many properties that you would like to see until you find the ONE you want to buy. We do not care if we show you 50 houses. You are making the purchase and we want you to be happy. I am pleased to also say that my company is 25 years old this year and we have helped many people get to where they need to be. There is nothing to small or large that we cannot handle. Remember: it is not about us; it is about helping you!

Take a chance with us; you will not be disappointed.
